

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO

3 1761 00870921 4

HOW TO STUDY LITERATURE

B. A. Heydrick

The publishers invite your opinion of this book, and inquire whether it will fit into your course as a text book for your pupils

REVISED EDITION First edition published last year, immediately adopted by hundreds of schools, which continue using it successfully

Digitized by the Internet Archive in 2007 with funding from Microsoft Corporation

Presented to the LIBRARY of the
UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO
by
Mrs. H. J. Cody

HOW TO STUDY LITERATURE

A GUIDE TO THE INTENSIVE STUDY OF LITERARY MASTERPIECES

BY

BENJAMIN A. HEYDRICK, A.B. (HARV.)

PROFESSOR OF ENGLISH LITERATURE, STATE NORMAL SCHOOL,
MILLERSVILLE, PA.

THIRD EDITION, REVISED AND ENLARGED

HINDS & NOBLE, Publishers

31-33-35 WEST 15TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY

COPYRIGHT 1901, 1902, 1903,
By BENJAMIN A. HEYDRICK.

PN
59
H45
1903

To M. L. B.

PREFACE

THIS book is intended to aid in the study of literature. It is generally conceded that the best method is to take up certain literary masterpieces. But how shall a masterpiece be studied? A play of Shakespeare's is before the class. The text-book is provided with an introduction and notes. The introduction gives the date and the sources of the play; the notes explain difficult words and allusions. It is easy to assign lessons on this basis, and very easy to set examinations on it. Yet a class may know introduction and notes thoroughly, and still be far from appreciating or even understanding the play as a piece of literature. For the introduction deals with facts of literary history; the notes with philology, grammar, and manners and customs of the time. This information is valuable, it is indispensable, but it is, after all, only a means to an end, and that end is the appreciation and enjoyment of a literary masterpiece.

The aim of this manual is to facilitate the systematic, careful, and appreciative study of literature as literature. It concentrates attention upon the text itself, not upon editorial explanation or comment. It furnishes means by which the student may ascertain for himself the chief characteristics of the book studied. It acquaints him with the fundamental principles of literary construction, and asks him to decide for himself how far these principles have been observed. Not to present ready-made opinions for his acceptance, but to teach him to see for himself and to judge for himself is the aim throughout.

Further, each book is treated as a type, a representative of a class, so that the study of a few books may open the way to the appreciation of many. The suggestions for comparative study, the collateral reading recommended, all have this object in view, that through the medium of a few volumes the student may gain an outlook upon the world of literature.

Outlines are given for the study of six literary types: in poetry, the epic, lyric, and drama; in prose, fiction, the essay, and the oration. These classes include practically all the books prescribed for the college entrance examinations and those studied in the first years of college work. In most secondary schools the study of literature is pursued for several years, three or four classics being taken up each year. This manual is not intended to supplant any of the texts used, but to supplement them, to be used with them as a guide.

The lists of critical terms given are intended to aid the student to say exactly what he means. It is often the case that a beginner feels the beauty or power of a masterpiece as fully as an older reader, but, lacking words to express himself, he falls back upon a general term like "fine," which may mean any one of twenty things. Yet if the terms are at hand, he can select the one he wants; he understands the meaning of the words, but they are not a part of his working vocabulary. To supply this lack, carefully selected lists of the commoner critical terms have been provided.

It is not intended that the outlines shall be followed rigidly in every detail. With a certain poem noted for the beauty and variety of its imagery, that section of the outline will be emphasized, the one on character-study, perhaps, abridged. On the other hand, if a class is already able to distinguish the figures of speech, and the poem studied is not noteworthy in this respect, that section of the outline may be omitted. This is, perhaps, only saying that this book does not pretend to take the place of the intelligent teacher.

B. A. H.

MILLERSVILLE, PA.

KEY TO PUBLISHERS REFERRED TO IN THIS VOLUME

Am. Bk. Co.	American Book Company
Ginn	Ginn and Company
Harpers	Harper and Brothers
Houghton	Houghton, Mifflin and Company
B. F. Johnson	B. F. Johnson Publishing Company
Lippincott	J. B. Lippincott Company
Lovell	John W. Lovell Company
Macmillan	The Macmillan Company
Putnam's	G. P. Putnam's Sons
Scribners	Charles Scribner's Sons

CONTENTS

	PAGE
PREFACE	v

PART I

NATURE AND CLASSES OF LITERATURE	i
OUTLINES FOR STUDY:
NARRATIVE POETRY	5
LYRIC POETRY	19
DRAMATIC POETRY	28
FICTION	40
THE ESSAY	53
THE ORATION	65

PART II

SPECIMEN STUDIES:

LOWELL'S "VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL"	73
TENNYSON'S "BUGLE SONG"	79
SHAKSPERE'S "HAMLET"	81
GEORGE ELIOT'S "SILAS MARNER"	92
MACAULAY'S ESSAY ON SAMUEL JOHNSON	98
WEBSTER'S BUNKER HILL MONUMENT ORATION	103
APPENDIX A. FIGURES OF SPEECH	108
APPENDIX B. VERSIFICATION	112
APPENDIX C. LIST OF RECOMMENDED READING	123
INDEX TO RECOMMENDED READING	151

NATURE AND CLASSES OF LITERATURE

LITERATURE, in the broadest sense, includes all written or printed books. Yet one would hardly speak of an arithmetic as a work of literature. A play of Shakspeare's, even though bound in paper covers, is literature, while a city directory, bound in leather, is not. It is necessary to distinguish two classes of books: those which aim merely to give information, and those which move us by their beauty or their power. Books of the latter class are called literature. The arithmetic and other text-books, the directory, encyclopædia, and other reference works, are books to which we go to find out facts. They are not literature, in the narrower sense of the word. But a novel we read not for facts, but because it is interesting: it holds us by its beauty or power, and therefore it is literature.

As literature appears under various forms, it is divided into several classes. The most obvious division is that of poetry and prose. To define poetry is a task which has puzzled the poets themselves. It is possible, however, to point out some of the essential differences between poetry and prose. In the first place, they differ in form. Poetry is arranged in short lines; these lines usually rime,¹ and, further, the accented syllables are so arranged as to form a regular rhythm; they can be read in a sing-song way. This regular rhythm is called metre.

But form alone is not sufficient.

Thirty days hath September,
April, June, and November.

That couplet has the form of poetry; it has rime and rhythm, but it is not poetry, it is not even literature. The lines merely help one to remember facts: there is neither beauty nor power in them. Now take two lines of true poetry:

Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops.

— Romeo and Juliet.

Here is not only form, but beauty. What is the fact told in these lines? That it is morning. That is the prose way of saying it. But the poet sees things imaginatively: to him the paling stars are the dying candles of night, and day is a living being, merry and eager.

¹ Formerly, but less correctly, spelled rhyme. See the Century, Standard, or International Dictionary.

Instead of stating a plain fact, he appeals to our imagination with pictures. Poetry, then, differs from prose in being more imaginative.

Again, take a familiar line from Gray's "Elegy":

The lowing herd winds slowly o'er the lea.

There is one word in that line, "lea," that would not be used in prose. Nor would we find "o'er" for "over." Poetry, then, has a slightly different vocabulary from prose.

To sum up, poetry differs from prose in possessing metre and usually rime, in using a slightly different vocabulary, and—most important of all—in being more imaginative.

Poetry is divided into classes, of which the chief ones are narrative, lyric, and dramatic. Narrative poetry is defined by its name; it is usually story-telling poetry, dealing with acts and events. If these events are of a lofty nature, and the poem extends to a considerable length, such as Homer's Iliad, it is called an epic. If the poem is short and spirited, such as Longfellow's "Skeleton in Armor," it is called a ballad.

In narrative poetry the writer relates the deeds of other men. But if a poet writes of himself, telling his own thoughts and feelings, and thus dealing with emotions instead of action, the result is lyric poetry. Lyric poetry may be described as feeling expressed in musical words. This feeling may be patriotic, as in our national hymn; it may be a feeling of grief, of love, of delight in the beauty of nature; the essential thing is that the writer puts his own feelings into verse.

Dramatic poetry is that which is written to be acted. It is like narrative poetry in that it deals with acts and events.

In a similar way prose is divided into certain general classes. If an author tells of the deeds of other men, he is writing history, or possibly a historical novel. If the characters are wholly imaginary, he is writing fiction. If he presents his own opinions and judgments in prose, the result is an essay. And finally, if what he writes is intended, not to be read, but to be spoken — just as a drama is written to be acted — we have oratory. These six classes, narrative, lyric, and dramatic poetry, fiction, the essay, and the oration, include nearly all books that come within the definition of literature.

For a discussion of literature in general, with helpful suggestions as to what and how to read, see Ruskin's Sesame and Lilies, Part I; Frederic Harrison's The Choice of Books (Macmillan); Emerson's essay on "Books," in Society and Solitude; James Baldwin's Book-Lover (McClurg) and Van Dyke's Counsel upon the Reading of Books (Houghton).

OUTLINE FOR THE STUDY OF NARRATIVE POETRY

(See Specimen Study, Part II, p. 73)

I. Mastery of Subject-matter

THE first step in the study of a literary work of any kind is to gain an idea of it as a whole. This can best be done by a single rapid reading, at a sitting, if possible. Do not stop to look up words nor to refer to the notes; you can understand enough of the work to gain a general idea of it. This done, the book should be read a second time, more carefully, in connection with the notes. These notes are not to be memorized; they are intended merely to help one to understand the text. After the work has been read in this way, take up the questions in the outline and answer them, with reference to the text when necessary. This mastery of subject-matter, the comprehension of the work as a whole, must precede any study of parts or of particular characteristics.

II. Classification

The chief classes of narrative poetry are :

(a) The Epic, a long poem treating a heroic theme in a dignified style, as Paradise Lost.

(b) The Metrical Romance, a long story in verse, less lofty in theme and style than the Epic ; often a love-story. Examples : Tennyson's Princess ; Scott's Marmion.

(c) The Metrical Tale, resembling the Metrical Romance, but briefer ; sometimes of a humorous nature. Examples : Chaucer's Canterbury Tales ; Tennyson's "Enoch Arden" ; Burns's "Tam O' Shanter."

(d) The Ballad, a short and spirited narrative poem in a simple style. Examples : Longfellow's "Wreck of the Hesperus" ; Coleridge's "Ancient Mariner."

(e) The Descriptive Poem. This deals with objects instead of events. There are often characters in it as in a tale, but there is little or no action. Example, Goldsmith's "Deserted Village." If the poem deals with rural life, it is called a Pastoral. Examples : Burns's "Cotter's Saturday Night," and Whittier's "Snow-Bound."

(f) The Allegory, a poem aiming to teach a lesson, in which the characters and events have a double significance. Examples : Spenser's Faerie Queene, and Dryden's "Absalom and Achitophel."

(g) The Mock-Epic, or mock-heroic poem, a form of parody in which the grand style of Epic poetry is applied to events of a trivial nature. Example, Pope's "Rape of the Lock."

Sometimes a poem exhibits characteristics of more than one of these classes. Lowell's "Vision of Sir Launfal" is a tale, yet it contains so much description that Stedman calls it a landscape poem. An allegory may be an epic, as Dante's Divine Comedy, or may be a metrical romance, as The Faerie Queene.

To which of the foregoing classes does the poem studied belong?

III. Purpose

A narrative poem may be written merely to entertain with an interesting and beautifully told story; it may elevate the mind by telling of heroic deeds; it may set forth the author's opinions upon some important subject; it may be written to enforce a moral, or to teach a spiritual truth.

(a) What purpose or purposes does this poem serve?

(b) If the poem aims to set forth the author's beliefs, or to teach a lesson of any kind, state this purpose in your own words.

(c) Is this purpose definitely stated, or merely implied? If stated, where?

IV. Plot

(a) Is the story perfectly clear, or are there parts that you did not understand at the first reading? Where?

(b) Considered simply as a story, is it interesting? Is there any place where the interest flags?

(c) The climax of a narrative is the place where the interest is at the highest pitch. Where is the climax here?

(d) Is the story probable, as a whole? Are any of the incidents improbable? If so, does this improbability make the poem less enjoyable?

(e) Has it unity? A plot has unity when it deals with a single event, or with a series of events so closely related that they form one story.

(f) An episode is an incident told at some length, perhaps several pages, which does not have any direct connection with the main story. In giving an outline of the plot, episodes would be omitted. They are most frequent in Epic poetry. Are there any episodes here? Do they affect the unity of the poem? What do they add, or why were they introduced at all?

(g) Is the plot original? If borrowed, what was the source? If possible, read the original story. Did the writer add to this, or alter it? What was the purpose of the changes?

V. Characters

(a) Are there many? i.e. many mentioned by name? Are they clearly distinguished, or do the minor characters talk and act about alike?

(b) Lifelike? Vividly drawn? Can you see them?

(c) Does the author describe in detail the appearance of his characters?

(d) Is there a hero? What are the chief traits of his character?

(e) Is there a heroine? What are her chief characteristics?

(f) Do men or women occupy the chief place?

(g) Are there any supernatural characters, — ghosts, angels, etc.? Is their use effective?

Characters may be stationary or developing. If stationary, they may suffer changes in fortune, etc., but their natures remain the same. If developing, the experiences they go through change their characters, so that they become more serious, more tolerant, more generous, etc., than at the beginning.

(g) Are the characters stationary or developing? If developing, do you think the experiences they go through are adequate to produce such changes?

VI. Setting

(a) Where are the events told supposed to occur? At what time in history, approximately?

(b) Are the time and place or places definitely stated, or do you infer them from allusions?

(c) Is there much description in the poem? Are the descriptions detailed, or does the author usually mention only one or two particulars about a scene or an object? Point out a description of each kind.

(d) Is there much description of nature? Select the best description of a landscape, a sunrise or a sunset, a bird or an animal. Are the descriptions of nature accurate? Does the author make them more vivid by personifying objects, speaking of "hungry waves," "timid flowers," etc.?

(e) Does the author introduce objects, expressions, customs, or details of costume peculiar to the place described? This is called local color.

(f) Are the descriptive passages kept secondary to the story, or are there places where the author seems more interested in description than anything else, giving more than necessary?

(g) Study carefully several of the longer descriptions to answer the following questions:

Does the author usually give the form of objects? The color?

Does he use general terms, as calling the sky "red," or is he specific, as calling it "a deep crimson"?

Does he usually mention sounds in his descriptions?
Odors?

Is there usually motion in his pictures?

Quote passages to illustrate answers.

(h) Does the author's strength lie chiefly in narration, in description, or in character drawing?

VII. Contrast

Contrast is one of the most effective devices in art. It may be in the plot, as where a defeat is closely followed by a victory; or in character, two persons being introduced, one just the opposite of the other in certain respects; or there may be a contrast between the same person's actions on different occasions; there may be contrast in the descriptions; and there may be contrast in the mood or tone of the poem, as where a tragic passage is followed by one in a lighter or even a humorous vein. Point out, if possible, an example of each. Note any other ways in which contrast is used.

VIII. Style

A. Style in General

1. Are there pathetic passages? Where? Is there humor in the poem? Where? Is the humor quiet or broad?

2. Select from the following list the word or words that best describe the style of the whole poem. If none of these words apply, suggest others.

Clear, direct, concise ;
Obscure, tedious, verbose ;
Fresh, natural ;
Awkward, stiff, harsh ;
Melodious, musical, sonorous.

3. Are there any parts of the poem you would describe as :

Graphic, animated ?
Earnest, dignified, grand, sublime ?
Strong, intense, impassioned ?
Delicate, brilliant ?

Give reference to passages where found.

B. Diction

1. Select the two or three terms from this list, or of your own choosing, that best describe the language of the poem :

Simple, colloquial, idiomatic ;
Elevated, polished, ornate (over-ornamented) ;
Smooth, strong, terse, elliptical.

2. Is the language different from that of prose? Markedly so? Give examples of poetic diction, — expressions peculiar to poetry, as "oft" for "often," "vasty deep" for "ocean," etc.

3. Are there examples of Biblical expressions?

C. Figures of Speech

Select several pages for careful study to answer the questions given below. For definitions and examples of figures of speech, see Appendix A, p. 108.

1. Is the poem notable for a profusion of figures of speech? Which kind of figure is most common?

2. Does the author use the simile? the metaphor? personification? metonymy? Is the Homeric simile found? Give examples of each.

3. Are many of the figures new, or are they familiar, like "red as a rose," "black as night," etc.? Give examples of original figures if found.

IX. Metre

(a) What is the metre of the poem? (See Appendix B, p. 111.) The metre of the great Epic in English is iambic pentameter; other narrative poetry is sometimes written in this metre, but more frequently in stanzas.

(b) Are there any variations from the normal metre, such as substitution of other feet, or changes in the stanza-form? (For variations in iambic pentameter, see Dramatic Poetry, Sec. VIII, p. 35.) What is the purpose of these changes?

(c) Are any parts of the poem written in an entirely different metre, as the lyrics in The Princess? What metre is used here? Why is the new form introduced?

(d) Write out the scansion of twenty lines.

X. Characteristics of Author

With very few exceptions, authors put their own personality into their works, so that it is possible to infer from any book some of the characteristics of the man who wrote it. In answering the questions below, do not expect to find indications of all or of many of the characteristics enumerated. Some will probably be apparent at once; others will disclose themselves after a little study.

(a) Judging from the book alone, would you infer that the author was:

Earnest, sympathetic, broad-minded, philanthropic?

Flippant, cynical, prejudiced, misanthropic?

Cheerful, optimistic? or grave, melancholy, pessimistic?

Independent, original, a reformer?

Positive in his opinions?

Conventional, conservative? democratic?

A man of high ideals? patriotic? devout?

In each case tell upon what passages you base your reply.

(b) Do his writings indicate that he possessed :

A vivid imagination ?

A keen sense of humor ?

A philosophical turn of mind, shown in a tendency to generalize, or to seek for causes ?

(c) Was he a man who had evidently had a wide experience of life ?

A man of much learning, scholarship ?

A man of broad culture, familiar with music, painting, literature, etc. ?

A lover of nature ?

What were his favorite books ?

(d) Apart from his fame as an author, would you like to know him ? To have him for a friend ?

(e) Write a theme upon the character of the author as shown in his works, quoting passages to illustrate your points.

XI. Memory Passages

(a) What do you consider the finest parts of the poem ? Select a passage of fifteen or twenty lines and memorize it.

(b) Are there single lines or couplets, notable for their beauty or power, which may serve as quotations? Select and memorize some of these.

XII. Life of Author

(a) Read a brief biography of the author. For British authors, the "Dictionary of National Biography" is the standard work of reference. Fuller treatment is given in the volumes of the English Men of Letters series (Harpers), and the Great Writers series (W. Scott). For American authors, consult the American Men of Letters series (Houghton). If possible, get a volume of his letters and read them: the true nature of a man usually comes out in his letters.

(b) What circumstances in his life seem to have influenced his literary work?

(c) Compare the characteristics of the man as given in his biography with your inferences drawn from his works.

XIII. Critical Opinion¹

(a) Read several of the best criticisms of this poem. Compare their statements with the results obtained by your study under Sections IV, V, VI, and VIII.

(b) Consult a standard history of literature to ascertain the position of this author, how he ranks with others of his age, and how this poem compares with other poems of the same class. Books that will be useful here are, for English literature, Saintsbury's Elizabethan Literature (Macmillan), Gosse's Eighteenth Century Literature (Macmillan), Perry's Eighteenth Century Literature (Harpers), Stedman's Victorian Poets (Houghton), Saintsbury's Nineteenth Century Literature (Macmillan). For American literature, consult Stedman's Poets of America (Houghton), Richardson's American Literature (Putnam), Barrett Wendell's Literary History of America (Scribners).

¹ Sections XIV and XV are intended for advanced classes.

XIV. Comparative Study

Choose another narrative poem of the same class, if possible one already studied or read, and run over it to compare it with this one in the chief points of the outline. Note particularly points in which there is a marked difference. Is this due to : the time in which the authors wrote ? their subjects ? or are the differences due to the men themselves ? The comparison of the two poems might be made the subject of a theme.

XV. Collateral Reading

(a) Epic Poetry. Milton's Paradise Lost and Paradise Regained stand alone in English as examples of the great Epic. The Epic poems of other literatures are accessible in translations. Homer's Iliad has been translated in verse by Pope, Chapman, Lord Derby, and Bryant ; Vergil's Æneid by Dryden and by Conington ; Dante's Divine Comedy by Cary, by Longfellow, and by Norton.

(b) Other Forms of Narrative Poetry. Some of the best examples have already been mentioned in Section II. To this list may be added Tennyson's Idylls of the King, William Morris's Earthly Paradise, Keats's "Isabella" and "The Eve of St. Agnes," and Matthew Arnold's "Sohrab and Rustum." Extended lists of narrative poems, with a discussion of the characteristics of this class of poetry, may be found in Baldwin's English Literature (B. F. Johnson), or in Arnold's Manual of English Literature (Ginn).

OUTLINE FOR THE STUDY OF LYRIC POETRY

(See Specimen Study, Part II, p. 79)

I. Mastery of Subject-matter

READ the poem or poems to be studied. It is best to read it first as a whole, not stopping to refer to notes. Then read it a second time, referring to notes and looking up new words. When the meaning of the poem is clear, take up the questions following.

II. Classification

By definition, lyric poetry deals with emotion. As this emotion may be of various kinds, lyrics are divided into various classes, as follows :

Love Lyric, as Burns's "Highland Mary," Browning's "One Way of Love."

Patriotic Lyric, as Key's "Star-Spangled Banner," Thomson's "Rule Britannia."

Sacred Lyric, as Milton's "Ode on the Nativity," Tennyson's "Crossing the Bar."

Lyric of Grief, as Hood's "Bridge of Sighs," Shelley's "Adonais."

Lyric of Supplication, as Wordsworth's sonnet "To Sleep"; Shelley's "To the Night."

Lyric of Praise, which may celebrate an individual, as Matthew Arnold's sonnet on Shakspeare, or a class, as Whittier's "The Ship Builders."

Reflective Lyric, as Milton's sonnet on his blindness, George Eliot's "Choir Invisible."

Descriptive Lyric, as Wordsworth's "Daffodils," Byron's "She Walks in Beauty."

Battle Lyric, as Campbell's "Battle of the Baltic," Scott's "Pibroch of Donuil Dnu."

Lyric of Fancy, as Ariel's songs in The Tempest, Keats's "Ode to a Nightingale."

Convivial Lyric, as Burns's "Rattlin', Roarin' Willie," Keats's "The Mermaid Tavern."

Humorous Lyric, as Burns's "Duncan Gray," Carey's "Sally in Our Alley."

Society Verse (Vers de Société), lyrics which treat of society themes in a graceful way, as Holmes's "The Last Leaf," Dobson's "A Dead Letter."

A lyric may combine feeling of several kinds: "Highland Mary" expresses grief as well as love, but one feeling usually predominates.

(a) To which of the foregoing classes does the poem studied belong?

Lyrics are also classified in another way, according to their form, as Songs, Odes, and Sonnets.

The Song includes the greater number of lyric poems. It is not restricted to compositions intended to be sung, but includes most short lyrics, except the Sonnet. It is characterized by brevity, and by simplicity in thought and language. Examples are Collins's "How Sleep the Brave," Scott's "Hunting Song," and Ariel's songs in The Tempest.

The Ode is longer than the Song, is more enthusiastic or exalted in mood, usually has a complicated metrical structure, and deals progressively with a dignified theme. Examples are Milton's "Ode on the Nativity," Dryden's "Alexander's Feast," and Wordsworth's "Intimations of Immortality."

The Sonnet is a poem of fourteen lines, written in iambic pentameter, and usually riming in a fixed order. (See Appendix B, p. 111.) It deals with a single idea or sentiment. Examples are the sonnets of Shakspeare.

(b) Does the poem studied belong to any of the foregoing classes?

III. Central Theme

Every lyric poem has a central thought. It is built up about some emotion as a core. The nature of this emotion was roughly indicated by the classification under Section II.

It now remains to state this emotion, or central theme, more definitely. A love lyric may express a mother's love for her child; a patriotic lyric may have for its theme patriotism conquering the fear of death, and so on.

(a) State definitely the central theme of the poem.

(b) Has it a secondary theme? If so, state it.

(c) Does the poem possess unity?

IV. Mood

The emotion underlying a lyric poem may be treated in various ways. A love lyric may be light and graceful, or deep and tender, or sad.

Select one or two words which best describe the mood of the poem, or choose adjectives of your own if none of these apply :

Tender, dreamy, sentimental, vague ;

Strong, intense, passionate, extravagant ;

Earnest, grave, sad, tragic, morbid ;

Light, fanciful, cheerful, reckless ;

Serene, exalted, triumphant, spiritual, solemn ;

Humorous, witty, satirical, pathetic, dramatic.

Is contrast used, part of the poem being in a different mood from the rest?

V. Movement

Read the poem aloud and decide which of the following terms best express its movement :

Smooth, slow, dignified, stately, solemn ;
 Light, swift, impetuous, rippling, rollicking ;
 Easy, graceful, spirited, powerful, regular ;
 Varied, irregular, uneven, halting.

VI. Sound

(a) As read aloud, is it pleasing to the ear? Is it musical?

(b) Is the music notable for its sweetness, its power, or its delicacy?

(c) Are there any harsh words or lines? Can you see why they are used?

(d) Are there any imitative words, where the sound is an echo to the sense, such as "hiss," "puff," etc.? Are there lines whose movement is imitative, suggesting the thought?

(e) Are there examples of alliteration, i.e. words close together beginning with the same sound?

(f) Does the author use the refrain, i.e. the repetition of a word or a line at the end of each stanza? If a line is repeated, with slight changes, as the next line, it is called a repetend. Example :

But our thoughts they were palsied and sere,
 Our memories were treacherous and sere.

Does this occur?

VII. StyleA. *Diction

Select the two or three terms from this list that best describe the language of the poem :

Simple, colloquial, idiomatic ;
Elevated, polished, ornate (over-ornamented) ;
Smooth, strong, terse, elliptical.

B. Style in General

1. What terms best describe the style of the poem :

Clear, direct, graphic, animated?
Obscure, awkward, verbose (too many words)?

2. Is it characterized by :

Freshness, naturalness, originality?
Strength, intensity, passion?
Delicacy, variety, brilliancy?
Grace, dignity, grandeur?
Beauty of sentiment? Beauty of description?
Profusion of imagery?

VIII. Structure

(a) What is the stanza form? The rime order? The metre? (See Appendix B, p. 112.)

Lyrical poetry is varied in metrical structure. It is often impossible to reduce the song and the ode to any definite metrical scheme.

(b) Are there any marked changes in the metre? Can you see why they were made, i.e. what effect is produced?

IX. Characteristics of Author

This question should be left until a number of poems by the same author have been studied ; then taking them as a group, turn to the outline for Narrative Poetry, Sec. X, p. 14, and answer the questions given there.

X. Memory Passages

Short lyrics should be committed entire ; with poems like Wordsworth's "Intimations of Immortality," the best stanzas may be selected for memorizing.

XI. Life of Author

As the lyric, more than any other form of poetry, expresses the author's personality, a knowledge of the man's life is more necessary here. See suggestions for study under Narrative Poetry, Sec. XII, p. 16.

XII. Critical Opinion¹

(a) Read several of the best criticisms of this poem. Compare their statements with the results obtained by your study under Sections IV, V, VI, and VIII.

¹ Sections XII and XIII are intended for advanced classes.

(b) Consult a standard history of literature to ascertain the position of this author, how he ranks with others of his age, and how this poem compares with other poems of the same class. For a list of books that will be useful for this purpose, see the references given under Narrative Poetry, Sec. XIII, (b), p. 16.

XIII. Comparative Study

Select a group of lyrics by another author, such as the lyrics in Tennyson's Princess, or Shakspeare's lyrics, or Poe's shorter poems, and compare them with the group just studied, according to the directions given under Narrative Poetry, Sec. XIV, p. 17.

XIV. Collateral Reading

(a) Collections of Lyric Poetry. Palgrave's Golden Treasury, First Series (Macmillan), contains the best lyric poetry written during three centuries of English literature. It is a book which every student of literature should own. The Golden Treasury, Second Series, is selected from writers of the Victorian period. Other valuable books are Carpenter's English Lyric Poetry (Scribners), and Schelling's Elizabethan Lyrics (Ginn). Both volumes contain selected poems, with scholarly introductions and notes.

(b) Individual Authors. Nearly all the great English poets have written lyrics. There are some, however, who stand out as distinctively lyric poets. Such are Burns and Herrick and Shelley. Other writers who have attained high eminence in lyric poetry are Tennyson, Swinburne, and Poe. The great sonnet writers in English literature are Shakspere, Milton, Wordsworth, and Dante G. Rossetti, and E. B. Browning. For recommended reading in these authors, see Appendix C, p. 123.

OUTLINE FOR THE STUDY OF DRAMATIC POETRY

(See Specimen Study, Part II. p. 81)

I. Mastery of Subject-matter

THE first step in the study of a literary work of any kind is to gain an idea of it as a whole. This can best be done by a single rapid reading, at a sitting, if possible. Do not stop to look up words nor to refer to the notes; you can understand enough of the work to gain a general idea of it. This done, the book should be read a second time, more carefully, in connection with the notes. These notes are not to be memorized; they are intended merely to help one to understand the text. After the work has been read in this way, take up the questions in the outline and answer them, with reference to the text when necessary. This mastery of subject-matter, the comprehension of the work as a whole, must precede any study of parts or of particular characteristics.

II. Classification

Plays are divided into the following classes :

Tragedy, in which the ending is sad ; the principal characters meet disaster or death. Example, Macbeth.

Comedy, presenting a cheerful or humorous view of life. Example, As You Like It.

Reconciling Drama, which, as the name implies, unites some of the characteristics of both the above. The tone is prevaillingly serious, but there are scenes of comedy ; a tragic ending is threatened, but averted, and the play ends happily. Example, The Merchant of Venice.

To which class does this play belong ?

III. Plot

Plots may be simple or complex. The simple plot is illustrated in Julius Cæsar. This play deals with the contest between Cæsar's friends and Cæsar's enemies. All the characters are included in these groups, and the whole plot deals with the strife between them. The complex plot is illustrated by The Merchant of Venice. Here there is a main story, that of the pound of flesh ; also a secondary story, the elopement of Jessica. The episodes of the caskets and of the rings still further complicate the main action. If the plot is not a single story, but several stories told side by side, it is called complex.

(a) Is the plot of this play simple or complex? If complex, how many threads, or separate stories, are there?

(b) Are all the events probable? If not, does the improbability make the play less enjoyable?

(c) Is the story of the play easy to follow, or is it sometimes confusing? Plays are written to be acted, not read, and are more easily understood when seen on the stage.

(d) Source. Is the plot of the play original or borrowed? If possible, read the original story. Shakspeare took the materials for his Greek and Roman plays from Plutarch's Lives; his English historical plays are largely based upon Holinshed's Chronicle. Both books are accessible. Morley's edition of the plays, in Cassell's National Library, gives the source of each play in the appendix.

(e) What alterations have been made in the original story? What additions? Why were these changes made? (This may form the subject of a theme.)

IV. Setting

(a) At what time in history are the events of the play supposed to occur? How much time do they occupy?

(b) At what place or places is the action carried on? Are these places real or imaginary?

(c) In minor details of costume, manners, etc., is the play true to history? If not, does this affect its merit as a play?

(d) Is there much description? Select the best description of a person ; of a scene or place.

(If a fuller study of description is desired, see questions under Narrative Poetry, Sec. VI, p. 10.)

V. Characters

(a) Who is the central figure of the play? What characters are associated with him, forming a group? Is there another group of characters? Who is the central figure here? How are these groups connected, thus giving unity to the plot?

(b) Are the characters clearly distinguished, or do you have some trouble in keeping them apart?

(c) Are they lifelike : do they stand out in your mind as real people? Are they vividly drawn : can you see them?

(d) Do men or women occupy the chief place?

Ruskin says : "Shakspeare has no heroes ; he has only heroines . . . The catastrophe of every play is caused always by the folly or fault of a man ; the redemption, if there be any, is by the wisdom and virtue of a woman." Sesame and Lilies : Of Queens' Gardens.

Is this true of the play read?

(e) Are there any humorous characters in the play? Name them.

(f) Study of Principal Characters. Take up the chief personages, one at a time, and follow them through the play to discover their chief traits of character. For example, in Julius Cæsar, when Brutus first appears he does not care to witness the sports, and says he is "not gamesome"; this indicates a sober disposition. He does not give an answer at once to Cassius's urging, showing him to be deliberate. Go through the play in this manner, noting every time the person acts, speaks, or is spoken of, and see whether any trait of character is thereby shown. At the end make a summary of the traits found. This is one of the most stimulating parts of the study. One or two lessons should be given to each of the principal characters.

Characters may be stationary or developing. If stationary, they may suffer changes in fortune, etc., but their natures remain the same. If developing, the experiences they go through change their characters, so that they become more serious, more tolerant, more generous, etc., than at the beginning.

(g) Are the characters stationary or developing? If developing, do you think the experiences they go through are adequate to produce such changes?

VI. Structure

Purpose of Scenes. Every scene in a well-written play serves a definite purpose. It may give us the situation, making us acquainted with facts necessary to comprehend what is to follow ; it may merely carry forward the action, i.e., continue the story ; it may serve to indicate character ; it may be introductory, preparing us for a scene to follow ; it may serve as a contrast to a preceding scene ; or it may deepen the effect of a preceding scene, as in Julius Cæsar the murder of Cinna shows to what a frenzy the mob had been wrought by Antony's speech.

(a) Go through the play and state briefly the purpose or purposes of each scene.

(Questions b to d inclusive apply to tragedy only.)

The essential element in tragedy is conflict. The chief character wishes to accomplish some end ; he is opposed by another, or by something within himself, or by fate, and so a conflict ensues.

(b) Who is the principal character? What does he wish to accomplish? What is his motive for this? This motive is called the exciting force of the tragedy. By

(c) Where is the climax of the play — the point where interest is at the highest pitch?

In the first half of the play the chief character advances toward the end he has in view ; this is called the "rising action," and continues to the turning-point, where he is nearest success.

(d) Where does the "rising action" begin? (It is usually where the exciting force enters.) Where is the turning-point? (Note that this is not the climax.)

After the turning-point, the opposing force proves stronger, and the chief character is gradually borne down by it. This is called the "falling action," and continues to the catastrophe, where the chief character meets ruin or death.

(e) Where is the "falling-action" first manifest, i.e., with what event does the decline begin?

Dramatic foreshadowing is the letting fall of hints to prepare us for a coming event, usually of a tragic nature, as Calpurnia's bad dreams before the murder of Cæsar.

(f) Look through one or two scenes immediately preceding an important event, and see if there are any hints of it.

VII. Contrast

(a) Contrast is one of the most effective devices in art. It may be in the plot, as where a defeat is closely followed by a victory ; or in character, two persons being introduced, one just the opposite of the other in certain respects ; or there may be a contrast between the same person's actions on different occasions ; there may be contrast in the descriptions ; and there may be contrast in the mood or tone of the poem, as where a tragic passage is followed by one in a lighter or even a humorous vein. Point out, if possible, an example of each. Note any other ways in which contrast is used.

(b) Allied to contrast is the principle of parallelism, or introducing characters or incidents that are similar in many respects. For example, in The Merchant of Venice, Bassanio's wooing is paralleled by Gratiano's ; both win their wives by the same lot, both receive rings, and both give them away. This is parallel of incident. Does the play studied contain examples of parallelism, either in incident or character?

VIII. Metre

(For explanation of metrical terms, see Appendix B, p. 112.)

The normal metre of the drama is iambic pentameter, without rime, and hence called blank verse. This is varied in the following ways :

By varying the place of the cæsure.

By the substitution of trochaic, spondaic, or pyrrhic feet.

By the addition of an unaccented syllable at the end of a line, or sometimes following a pause within the line.

By the addition of a sixth foot, making what is called an Alexandrine line.

By the use of incomplete lines, usually in dialogue.

By the use of lines divided between two speakers.

By the use of rimed couplets, often at the end of a scene.

By the alternation of end-stopt and run-on lines. (See Appendix B, p. 111.)

By the introduction of lyrics, as Ophelia's songs in Hamlet.

By the use of prose for certain parts.

(a) Scan twenty lines, noting the occurrence of any of the points mentioned. What proportion of the lines are run-on?

(b) Are there any lyrics in the play? What is the metre of these?

(c) Are any scenes entirely in prose? Why is prose used here? Find a scene in which both prose and verse occur. What is the reason for the change from one to the other? Does it depend upon the speaker, or the nature of the discourse?

IX. Style

(a) Is the language of the play always clear? If obscure, is this due to the words, which are no longer in use, or to the thought, which is not clearly expressed?

(b) Are there allusions to the Bible, or any echoes of Biblical style in the play?

(c) Point out examples of poetic diction, i.e., words or phrases that would not be found in prose.

(d) Is any part of the play written in dialect? What is gained by its use?

(e) Is there humor in the play? Are any scenes chiefly humorous? What purpose does humor serve in a tragedy?

(f) Is there pathos? Point out examples.

(g) Is the style of the play at the same level throughout, or are there places where the author rises to a higher poetic level? Give examples.

X. Memory Passages

(a) What do you consider the finest parts of the play? Select a passage of fifteen or twenty lines and memorize it.

(b) Are there single lines, or couplets, notable for their beauty or power, which may serve as quotations? Select and memorize some of these.

XI. Life of Author

For a brief life of Shakspeare, consult Dowden's Shakspeare Primer, Chap. II (Am. Bk. Co.), or Wendell's William Shakspeare, Chap. II (Scribners). For a fuller treatment, see the Life, by Sydney Lee (Macmillan). If other books are consulted, be careful to separate fact from tradition. In reading about his life, note particularly the events which influenced his work as a writer of plays.

XII. Critical Opinion

Read what is said of the play in Dowden's Shakspeare, His Mind and Art (Harpers), or read the views of critics in the introduction to Rolfe's edition of the play (Am. Bk. Co.), or in the appendix to Furness's Variorum (Lippincott). Compare briefly with the results of your study. What new points are brought out?

XIII. Comparative Study

Choose another play of the same class, if possible one already studied or read, and run over it to compare it with this one in the chief points of the outline. Note particularly points in which there is a marked difference. The comparison of the two plays might be made the subject of a theme.

XIV. Collateral Reading

The careful study of one play makes the reading of others a greater pleasure. There are some of Shakspeare's plays which every educated person is supposed to have read. Such are The Merchant of Venice, Hamlet, Macbeth, Romeo and Juliet, King Lear, Julius Cæsar, Othello, and As You Like It. In addition, the following may be recommended: The Tempest, King Henry IV, King Henry V, Taming of the Shrew, Midsummer Night's Dream, Merry Wives of Windsor, and Winter's Tale.

OUTLINE FOR THE STUDY OF FICTION

(See Specimen Study, Part II, p. 92)

I. Mastery of Subject-matter

Read the story rapidly, not stopping for introduction nor notes. The purpose of this is to gain a knowledge of the plot, and to receive an impression of the book as a whole.

II. Title

The title of a story may name the principal character, as in David Copperfield; or it may suggest the plot, as Kidnapped; or name the scene, as Middlemarch; or the time, as Ninety-Three; or mention some significant object, as The Scarlet Letter; or indicate the nature of the story, whether tragic or the reverse, as The Light That Failed; or the title may be merely fantastic, chosen to arouse curiosity, as Kipling's .007. Sometimes a title serves several purposes: The Last Days of Pompeii gives both place and time ; Sentimental Tommy names the chief character and suggests the tone of the story. Modern titles often aim at this suggestiveness, as The Choir Invisible, The End of the Passage, etc.

What purpose or purposes does the title serve ?

III. Purpose

Fiction may be written simply to entertain, as Robinson Crusoe ; it may present a historical picture, as Ivanhoe ; or teach a moral lesson, as Romola ; or advocate a cause, as Uncle Tom's Cabin ; or set forth the author's views upon certain subjects, as Meredith's The Egoist ; or present a faithful picture of life as it is, as Howells's A Woman's Reason. Many books serve more than one of these purposes, yet one is usually dominant.

(a) What was the author's purpose in writing this book ?

(b) If the book aims to teach a lesson, state this lesson in your own words. Is this lesson definitely stated in the book, or merely implied ? If stated, where ? (Read the preface.)

(c) If the book has a purpose beyond entertainment, is this purpose made too prominent, so that it injures the book as a story ?

IV. Plot

(a) Is the story interesting? Does the interest flag at any point? Where?

(b) Is it probable as a whole? Are any incidents improbable? Would the story be better without them?

Plots may be simple or complex. The simple plot deals with one character or a single group of characters, and follows their fortunes to the conclusion. This is usually the method of the short story. The complex plot has several groups; the story deals with one, then takes up another, then returns to the first, etc. This is the method of the romance and usually that of the novel.

(c) Is the plot here simple or complex? If complex, how many threads, or stories of different groups? How are these threads united, so that the whole plot is a unit instead of a number of unconnected stories? What characters serve as connecting links?

(d) Would you describe the movement of the story, the way events succeed each other, as slow, rapid, or usual? Point out passages where the movement is slow, where it is rapid. Is it retarded by much description? By the author's stopping to explain his characters?

(e) Does the story progress steadily from the beginning, or does it open with some event, and then in a later chapter go back and tell what happened before? This is called reverting narration.

(f) Does it rise to a climax, a point where the interest is at the highest pitch? Where is this?

(g) Does the author employ suspense, breaking off the story at a critical point to take up another group of people? Point out instances.

(h) Does the author prepare you for important events by letting fall hints beforehand? Give instances.

(i) Does the story end happily or unhappily? Would you prefer a different ending? What?

(j) Select the best chapters or the best pages.

V. Characters

(a) Many or few? Did you occasionally get them confused? Too many?

(b) Drawn from what classes of society? If from several, with which is the author most successful?

(c) Does the author succeed best with men or women? Successful with children?

(d) Are the characters lifelike?

(e) Are they like real people, or are they exceptional, being braver, more fortunate, more beautiful, or more villainous than people usually are in real life?

(f) Is there any tendency to exaggerate certain traits of character, so making caricatures?

(g) Are any of the characters historical? If so, does the novelist present them in the same light as historians do? This may be made the subject of a theme.

(h) Can you separate the characters easily into two groups, — good people and wicked people, — or are good and evil traits mingled in the same person, the good people sometimes yielding to temptation, and even the worst characters having some redeeming traits?

(i) Are the characters consistent, or do they sometimes surprise you by doing something you think they would not do?

Characters may be stationary or developing. If stationary, they may suffer changes in fortune, etc., but their natures remain the same. If developing, the experiences they go through change their characters, so that they become more serious, more tolerant, more generous, etc., than at the beginning.

(j) Are the characters stationary or developing? If developing, do you think the experiences they go through are adequate to produce such changes?

There are two methods of characterization: the dramatic and the analytic. In the dramatic we form our opinions of the characters from what they do and say; in the analytic method, the author comments upon the characters, explaining their motives, etc.

(k) Which method is usually employed here? Most authors combine the two. Point out examples of characterization by each method.

(l) Who is the hero? What are the chief traits of his character, the things for which you admire him? Who is the heroine, and what are her chief traits?

(m) In general, what qualities or traits of character does the author represent as most admirable? What do you think his ideal man would be like? Which of his characters comes nearest this? This may be made the subject of a theme.

(n) Are there any supernatural characters, as ghosts, etc.? Is their use effective, or would the story be better without them?

(o) Do men or women occupy the chief place in the story?

(p) In the older type of stories, the author used to call up all his characters in the last chapter and say a few words about the final fortunes of each one. Realistic fiction — that which aims to present life as it is — usually omits this general dismissal at the close.

Which method is followed here?

VI. Classification

Fiction includes the romance and the novel. In the romance the incidents are often improbable or unusual; the chief characters are not ordinary people ;¹ the chief interest is in the plot : you read it for the story. In the novel the incidents are probable, the characters taken from every-day life, and you are interested in the characters as much as in the plot.

Is this a romance or a novel?

VII. Description

(a) Are there any long passages of description? Do they interfere with the progress of the story? Were you tempted to skip them?

(b) Is there much description of nature? Did you like it? Is it accurate? Select the best description of a landscape, a sunrise, or a sunset.

(c) Does the author introduce objects or details of costume, etc., peculiar to the locality he is describing? This is called local color.

(d) Sometimes description is used for dramatic background, as when a fight takes place during a storm, or lovers meet by moonlight ; the surroundings harmonizing with the action, or sometimes contrasting with it. Are there examples of this?

¹ In the old romance, of Scott and Dumas, the characters are usually types : the soldier, the priest, the noble, etc., embodying the characteristics of a class, but not sharply individualized. In the modern romance, of Stevenson, the characters are individualized.

In describing people, various methods may be used :

Exaggeration of some particular trait or feature ; giving a character some peculiarity, and always mentioning this when the character appears, so that it becomes a means of identifying him.

Enumeration : mentioning many details of appearance, dress, manners, etc.

Selected details : mentioning only two or three details, but these so well chosen that you have a clear picture of the person.

(e) Note where the principal characters first appear, and see which method is followed in describing them.

(f) Does the author's strength lie chiefly in narration, in character drawing, or in description ?

(If a fuller study of description is desired, other questions will be found under Narrative Poetry, Sec. VI, p. 10.)

VIII. Contrast

Contrast is one of the most effective devices in art. It may be in the plot, as where a defeat is closely followed by a victory ; or in character, two persons being introduced, one just the opposite of the other in certain respects ; or there may be a contrast between the same person's actions on different occasions ; there may be contrast in the descriptions ; and there may be contrast in the mood or tone of the story, as where a tragic passage is followed by one in a lighter or even a humorous vein. Point out, if possible, an example of each. Note any other ways in which contrast is used.

IX. Style

A. Style in General

1. Does it possess individuality, i.e. is it markedly different from that of other writers, so that you could recognize a book by this writer if you did not know who wrote it?

2. Does the author have the power of making epigrams, i.e. short, striking sentences, full of meaning, that may serve as quotations? Select and memorize some of these.

3. Is there any humor? Is it quiet or broad? Is it one of the strong points of the book? Give examples.

4. Are there pathetic passages? Are they affecting? Select the best. Is pathos one of the strong points of the book?

5. Would you describe the style as :

Clear, direct, animated, brilliant?

Balanced, stiff, artificial, bookish, dull?

Eccentric, confused, disjointed, obscure?

Quote passages in illustration, and say which of these qualities are characteristic of the style, which are occasional.

6. Of the three chief qualities of style, clearness, force and beauty, which is most notable in this book?

B. Diction

1. Does the author use any words that are unfamiliar? Many? Give examples.

2. Is dialect used? Is it hard to understand? What is gained by its use?

3. In the dialogues, do the characters talk like ordinary people, or is the conversation rather stiff and bookish? Or are they too clever, always saying bright things?

4. Which of these terms best describe the diction:

Simple, idiomatic, colloquial?

Polished, elevated, dignified?

Terse, vigorous, picturesque?

(If a fuller study of style is desired, see questions under Essay, Sec. V, p. 58.)

X. Characteristics of Author

With very few exceptions, authors put their own personality into their works, so that it is possible to infer from any book some of the characteristics of the man who wrote it. In answering the questions below, do not expect to find indications of all or of many of the characteristics enumerated. Some will probably be apparent at once, others will disclose themselves after a little study.

(a) Judging from the book alone, would you infer that the author was :

Earnest, sympathetic, broad-minded, philanthropic?

Flippant, cynical, prejudiced, misanthropic?

Cheerful, optimistic ; or grave, pessimistic?

Independent, original, a reformer?

Conventional, conservative?

A man of high ideals? patriotic? devout?

In each case tell upon what passages you base your reply.

(b) Do his writings indicate that he possessed :

A vivid imagination?

A keen sense of humor?

A philosophical turn of mind, shown in a tendency to generalize, or to seek for causes?

(c) Was he a man who had evidently had a wide experience of life?

A man of much learning, scholarship?

A man of broad culture, familiar with music, painting, literature, etc.?

A lover of nature? What were his favorite books?

(d) Apart from his fame as an author, would you like to know him? To have him for a friend?

(e) Write a theme upon the character of the author as shown in his works, quoting passages to illustrate your points.

XI. Life of Author

See Narrative Poetry, Sec. XII, p. 16.

XII. Critical Opinion

Read one or two good critical articles discussing this author. Lists of such articles are given in Clark's English Prose Writers (Scribners). Consult a standard history of literature to learn the historical importance of this writer; how he ranks with others of his time; how he compares with other great novelists. See references under Narrative Poetry, Sec. XIII, b, and add the following: The Development of the English Novel, Cross (Macmillan), and The English Novel, Raleigh (Scribners). The latter book follows the history of fiction only to 1814. The Evolution of the English Novel, Stoddard (Macmillan) is a recent book of value in the study of fiction.

XIII. Comparative Study

Choose a story recently read, if possible, one of a different type, as a novel instead of a romance, and go over it to compare with this in the chief points of the outline, noting particularly where there are marked differences. Are these due to the time in which the men wrote, the subject, the nature of the story, — whether romance or novel, — or to differences in the authors? This comparison may be made the subject of a theme.

XIV. Collateral Reading

The present is the age of the novel as truly as the Elizabethan period was the age of the drama. The student of literature should read at least one book by each of the masters of English fiction. Defoe, Goldsmith, Jane Austen, Scott, Dickens, Thackeray, George Eliot, R. L. Stevenson, Rudyard Kipling; and Cooper, Hawthorne, Poe, and W. D. Howells may be mentioned as a suggestive list. For recommended readings in these authors, see Appendix C, p. 123. The supply of fiction is so constant to-day that the temptation is strong to read the book of the day, usually of very slight significance, and speedily forgotten. Emerson's rule never to read any book that is not a year old will save one from much trash.

OUTLINE FOR THE STUDY OF THE ESSAY

(See Specimen Study, Part II, p. 98)

I. Mastery of Subject-matter

The first step in the study of a literary work of any kind is to gain an idea of it as a whole. This can best be done by a single rapid reading, at a sitting if possible. Do not stop to look up words nor to refer to the notes; you can understand enough of the work to gain a general idea of it. This done, the book should be read a second time, more carefully, in connection with the notes. These notes are not to be memorized; they are intended merely to help one to understand the text. After the work has been read in this way, take up the questions in the outline and answer them, with reference to the text when necessary. This mastery of subject-matter, the comprehension of the work as a whole, must precede any study of parts or of particular characteristics.

II. Classification

Essays may be classified, according to the manner in which the subject is treated, into:

Narrative Essays, those which relate a series of events, as a biography or a historical sketch. Examples : Macaulay's "Warren Hastings"; De Quincey's "Flight of a Tartar Tribe."

Critical Essays, usually dealing with questions of literature or art, as Lowell's Among My Books; Walter Pater's The Renaissance.

Reflective, or Wisdom Essays, dealing with general subjects, and usually didactic. Example, Bacon's Essays, and Emerson's.

Personal Essays, which do not pretend to present new truths, nor great thoughts, but give the author's individual opinions of men and things. The personal essay is often humorous. Example, Lamb's Essays of Elia.

Essays may belong to more than one of these classes. Macaulay's "Life and Writings of Addison" is partly narrative, partly critical. Yet one characteristic usually predominates.

To which of the above classes does the essay belong?

III. Structure

The essay has no rigid laws of structure. In longer essays, however, such as Macaulay's, some plan is followed.

(a) The Introduction. The opening paragraphs usually serve as an introduction. Where does the introduction end?

This may serve several ends, as follows : To state clearly and fully the subject of the essay ; to arouse interest in this subject ; to give the author's reasons for choosing the subject ; to indicate the manner in which the subject is to be treated.

(b) What purpose or purposes does this introduction accomplish?

(c) The Body. What is the central theme of the essay, the principal subject treated? State this in a sentence. Is there more than one subject? If several, are they closely related? Then does the essay possess unity? (Essays are permitted more latitude in this respect than other literary forms.) Are there any digressions, places where the author speaks at some length, usually several pages, of matters not directly connected with the main subject? Do these violate the unity of the essay?

(d) The Conclusion. Has the essay a formal conclusion? If so, where does it begin?

This may serve to sum up the main points in the essay ; to restate certain points for emphasis ; or to make a well-rounded close, leaving a favorable impression in the minds of the hearers.

(e) What purpose or purposes does this conclusion serve?

IV. Study of Essay as a Whole

The method of study will depend upon the nature of the essay.

A. Narrative Essay

1. Are the events told in a logical order, so that the thought of the essay is easy to follow? What order is observed, that of time, or of cause and effect?

2. Is there much description of places? Enough to give a clear idea of the situation? Too much? Select the best descriptive passages.

3. Are the descriptions of people vivid? Have you a clear mental picture of them?

4. If the essay is biographical, does the author succeed in presenting a complete picture of the man, — is he real to you?

5. If the essay is biographical, read the account of the man given in an encyclopædia. Comparing this with the essay, is the essayist a hero-worshipper, presenting his subject in the most favorable light, or has he dwelt too much upon faults, lowering the man in our opinions? Or is the essay a frank setting-forth of the facts, without bias in either direction? If the latter, what was the essayist's motive in telling what was already known?

6. If the essay is historical, compare it with the account given in a standard history. Judged by this, is the essay accurate in matters of fact? Is it more, or less, interesting, or vivid, than the history? Are any new facts brought out in the essay? If not, what was the aim of the essayist in restating facts already known?

B. Critical Essay

This usually deals with an author or a single book. Read the book first, then the essay.

1. Does the essayist judge too harshly or praise too highly? Is he fair?

2. Can you feel the merit of all that he praises? If not, does this show that the praise is misplaced?

3. Is it the aim of the essayist to call attention to merits which have not been appreciated? To point out faults in a work that has been overestimated? Or to give a complete view of the work, showing merits and faults impartially? To answer this, read a criticism of the book by another author, and compare the two.

C. Reflective Essay

This demands careful study, sentence by sentence, to insure that the meaning is grasped. Difficult words and allusions should be looked up in an unabridged dictionary, not to commit the definitions, but to understand the use of the words in this place.

D. Personal Essay

To what extent does the author reveal himself in his work? Can you infer what his habits were? his likes and dislikes? his favorite books? See questions under Narrative Poetry, Sec. X, p. 14.

V. StyleA. Style in General

1. Does it possess individuality, i.e. is the style markedly different from that of other writers, so that you might recognize a book of his even if you did not know the author?

2. Is there any humor in the essay? Is it quiet or broad? Is humor one of the strong points of the book? Point out examples.

3. Is pathos found? Is it effective?

4. Does the author employ irony? ridicule? satire? Any of these to a marked degree?

5. Are figures of speech used? frequently? Are they effective? Point out examples. (See App. A, p. 108.)

6. Is the work characterized by accuracy of statement? logical power? keen analysis? sympathetic appreciation? depth of insight? sincerity? or by exaggeration? prejudice? untruth?

7. Select such of the terms below or of your own choosing as apply to his style :

Smooth, graceful, musical ;

Rough, plain, harsh, commonplace ;

Direct, animated, brilliant, stimulating ;

Balanced, rhetorical, stiff, bookish, dull ;

Clear, flexible, poetic, dignified ;

Obscure, rambling, confused, eccentric, pedantic.

8. Of the three chief qualities of style, clearness, force, and beauty, which is the most marked here?

9. Compare a few pages of an oration and note differences of style. What appear to be the distinguishing qualities of essay style?

10. Write a theme on the style of this essay, giving quotations to illustrate the chief points.

B. Quotation and Allusion

1. Does the author quote other writers? Frequently? From what books does he quote oftenest? Does he quote accurately?

An allusion is an indirect reference, the author taking for granted the reader's knowledge of the thing referred to. Thus to say, "I was plunged in a slough of despond," is to make an allusion to Pilgrim's Progress; "He poured out the vials of his wrath upon my head" is an allusion to Revelation. Allusions to the Bible are frequent, also to Shakspere, to Milton, and to classic mythology.

2. Are there examples of allusion? What books are most frequently alluded to?

C. Paragraphs

1. Long, short, or of medium length? The average length of paragraphs in modern prose, unbroken by dialogue, is between 100 and 120 words.¹ Count ten consecutive paragraphs and get the average.

2. Do they possess unity? The test for this is to state the substance of the paragraph in a sentence. Try ten paragraphs in this way to see whether any of them contain ideas not closely related to the main thought.

3. Are the paragraphs usually linked together by some expression at the beginning, as "in the next place," or by the repetition of a word used near the end of the preceding paragraph? Point out examples of linked paragraphs.

4. If possible, make an outline of the essay, by paragraphs, stating the subject of each in a sentence. Do the paragraphs follow in logical order, one continuing the thought of the preceding paragraph, or are there some that seem out of place?

¹ This statement is based on a count of thousands of examples taken from modern writers.

D. Sentences

1. Always clear? In structure, are they simple or much involved?

2. Long, short, or of average length? The average sentence-length in modern prose is between twenty-five and thirty words.¹ Count twenty consecutive sentences and find the average.

3. Do they sometimes contain several principal ideas, not closely related, and so lack unity?

4. In structure, are they generally loose or periodic?

5. Are balanced sentences used frequently? Give examples.

6. Are exclamatory or interrogative sentences used frequently? What is gained by this form?

7. Is antithesis used? Climax? Give examples.

8. Does the author possess the power of making epigrams, i.e. short, pithy sentences that may serve as quotations? Give examples.

E. Words

1. Are there any unusual words? many? are these words newly coined? slang? technical terms? foreign words? dialect? obsolete words? Give examples.

2. Is the author's vocabulary copious? This is shown partly in the use of unfamiliar words, partly in the repetition of ideas without repeating the words, partly in the choice of words, the author always having the right word to express his meaning.

¹ See note, p. 60.

3. Does he use words precisely, showing an exact knowledge of their meanings?

4. Does he prefer specific or general terms? Give examples.

5. Are there examples of Biblical forms of speech? Give examples.

6. Select the two or three words in the following list which best describe his diction :

Clear, simple, idiomatic, colloquial, homely ;

Learned, terse, polished, eloquent, ornate (over-ornamented) ;

Obscure, quaint, grotesque, hackneyed, verbose (too many words).

Quote passages which illustrate your answer. Distinguish between qualities that are characteristic of the author's style, and those which are shown occasionally.

VI. Memory Passages

Select the best passages in the essay. Do they appeal to you chiefly because of their beauty, or their truth, or their strength? Memorize one of these passages. Select and memorize single sentences that impress you.

VII. Characteristics of Author

See Narrative Poetry, Sec. X, p. 14.

VIII. Life of Author

See Narrative Poetry, Sec. XII, p. 16.

IX. Critical Opinion

Read one or two good critical articles discussing this author. Lists of such articles are given in Clark's English Prose Writers (Scribners). Consult a standard history of literature to learn the historical importance of this writer ; how he ranks with other great essayists. Books that will be useful here are, for English literature : Gosse, Eighteenth Century Literature (Macmillan) ; Perry, Eighteenth Century Literature (Harpers) ; Saintsbury, Nineteenth Century Literature (Macmillan) ; Oliphant, Victorian Literature (Lovell). For American literature, Richardson, American Literature (Putnams) ; Wendell, Literary History of America (Scribners) ; Carpenter, American Prose (Macmillan.)

X. Comparative Study

Select an essay by another author, preferably one already studied or read, and compare with this. See Narrative Poetry, Sec. XIV, p. 17.

XI. Collateral Reading

The works of the great essayists present a rich field for the student. The following list is suggested: Bacon, Emerson, Macaulay, Addison, Lamb, Carlyle, Ruskin, De Quincey, Matthew Arnold, John Henry Newman, Lowell, John Burroughs. For recommended reading in these authors, see Appendix C, p. 123.

OUTLINE FOR THE STUDY OF THE ORATION

(See Specimen Study, Part II, p. 103)

I. Mastery of Subject-matter

See Essay, Sec. I, p. 53.

II. Structure

An oration may usually be divided into three parts: the introduction; the discussion, or handling of the theme; and the conclusion, or peroration. Can this oration be so divided? Where does the introduction end? The discussion?

III. The Introduction

This may serve several ends, as follows: To state clearly and fully the subject of the oration; to arouse interest in this subject; to give the orator's reasons for choosing the subject; to indicate the manner in which the subject is to be treated; to gain the good-will of the audience.

What purpose or purposes does this introduction accomplish?

IV. The Discussion

An orator always has some definite aim. He may wish to persuade his hearers of some truth ; or to move them to some action ; or to lead them to honor some character. This motive forms the central theme of the oration, and to developing this the discussion is devoted.

(a) What is the central theme here? State it clearly in a sentence. Where is this fully set forth? Why here rather than sooner or later?

An orator aims to influence men's minds. He may do this by appealing to their intellect, presenting arguments, or appealing to their emotions, arousing their anger, pity, sympathy, etc.

(b) Which method is employed most frequently? Point out examples of each, if possible. In passages which appeal to the intellect, does the orator usually make a statement and then give his reasons for it, or do the reasons come first, the statement following as a conclusion? Which order seems preferable?

(c) If the orator is attempting to persuade his hearers to a certain course of action, does he take them on high moral grounds, appealing to their honor, their patriotism, their sense of justice, etc. ; or does he rest his case upon expediency, showing that it would be easier, cheaper, more convenient, or more to their advantage, to act so? Give examples of appeals of each kind, if possible.

(d) Are there any places where the orator turns aside and speaks at some length of matters which do not bear directly on the main thought? Can you justify these digressions?

V. The Peroration

This may serve to sum up the main points in the oration; to restate certain points for emphasis; or to make a well-rounded close, leaving a favorable impression in the minds of the hearers.

(a) What purpose or purposes does this peroration serve?

(b) Is the style of the peroration at all different from that of the introduction, or the discussion? In what respect?

VI. Style

See Essay, Sec. V, p. 58, and add to the questions there given the following, under Style in General:

Euphony, or pleasing sound, is particularly desirable in an oration. Read the best passages aloud; note the rhythm of the sentences. Would they deliver well? Are there any unpleasant combinations of sounds?

VII. Memory Passages

Select the best passages in the oration. Do they appeal to you chiefly because of their beauty, or their truth, or their strength? Memorize one of these passages. Select and memorize single sentences that impress you.

VIII. Characteristics of Author

See Narrative Poetry, Sec. X, p. 14.

IX. Life of Author

See Narrative Poetry, Sec. XII, p. 16.

X. Critical Opinion

See Essay, Sec. IX, p. 63.

XI. Comparative Study

Select another oration, preferably one already studied or read, and compare with this according to suggestions given under Narrative Poetry, Sec. XIV, p. 17.

XII. Collateral Reading

(a) Illustrative Matter. Great orations are usually inspired by great crises in a nation's life, or deal with men who have made great achievements. To appreciate such orations fully, it is necessary to be familiar with the measures or the men discussed. Standard biographies, such as the American Statesmen Series, and the larger histories of the United States and England, will furnish means for this study.

(b) Other Orations. The number of great orators whose speeches survive as literature is not large. Pitt, Burke, Fox, Sheridan, Clay, Calhoun, Webster, Everett, Lincoln, Sumner, and Phillips, are among the most important. The student who aims at public life, with its accompanying necessity for public speaking, will be helped by studying the models of oratory left by these men.

PART II

SPECIMEN STUDIES

STUDY OF LOWELL'S "VISION OF SIR LAUNFAL"

II. Classification

Metrical Tale.

III. Purpose

- (a) To entertain, and to teach a spiritual truth.
- (b) It teaches the true spirit of charity: that unless you give yourself with your gift, it is nothing.
- (c) This lesson is definitely stated in Part I, stanza 6, and in Part II, stanza 8.

IV. Plot

(a) The story is clear after the introduction of Sir Launfal, but in the first prelude it does not appear for some time what the poem is about.

(b) It is interesting, though perhaps the interest flags in the long description in the second prelude.

(c) The climax occurs in Part II, stanza 7, where the leper is transformed.

(d) The story is probable, since the two meetings with the leper are represented as only a dream.

(e) The poem has not perfect unity: the first prelude is not strictly a part of the story.

(f) There are no episodes.

(g) The plot is original.

V. Characters

(a) The characters are few, and clearly distinguished.

(b) They are lifelike, though not very vividly drawn.

(c) The hero is Sir Launfal. His character is marked at first by pride and scornfulness, later by humility and charity.

(d, e) Women are absent from the poem.

(f) The leper is a supernatural character, and effectively used.

(g) The chief character is developing, as explained above. It is a question whether a dream would suffice to cause such a change.

VI. Setting

(a) The events are supposed to occur in England, probably during the Middle Ages, when chivalry flourished.

(b) The time and place are not definitely stated.

(c) There is much description in the poem. A detailed description is that of the June day, in the first prelude. Examples of brief description are those of the castle, Part I, stanza 2, and of the leper, Part I, stanza 5.

(d) The poem is full of description of nature. Besides the long descriptions in the two preludes, there are brief ones in Part II, stanzas 1 and 3. Nearly all the similes are drawn from nature. Perhaps the best description is that of the June day. The descriptions are accurate, as where he speaks of the robin "plastering" his nest, and says that the river is bluer than the sky, showing close observation. Personification of natural objects is frequent, e.g. "Every clod feels a stir of might."

(e) There is no local color, as there is no definite locality.

(f) The descriptive passages in the preludes are as important as the story.

(g) The author does not usually give the form of objects; he gives color, using general rather than specific terms. There is usually sound and motion in his descriptions. All these points are shown in the second prelude, stanza 2. He does not mention odors.

(h) His strength lies chiefly in description.

VII. Contrast

There is contrast in station between the proud knight and the poor leper; there is contrast in character between Sir Launfal in Part I and in Part II. There is contrast in description between the two preludes. Minor contrasts are between the gloomy castle and the glad bright country around it; between the merry-making in the castle on Christmas eve and the cold and storm without.

VIII. Style

A. Style in General

1. There is pathos in the figure of Sir Launfal turned away from his castle gate (Part II, stanza 2). There is no humor.

2. The style as a whole is clear, fresh, and musical.

3. The tone is earnest and dignified, especially in Part II. The description of the brook in the second prelude is delicate.

B. Diction

1. The diction is polished and elevated.

2. It differs from that of prose. In the opening lines of the poem the words "list," "lay," and "doth" belong to the diction of poetry.

3. Biblical expressions are found, e.g.,

Himself the Gate whereby men can Enter the temple of God in man (II, 7).

C. Figures of Speech

1. The poem has a profusion of imagery: the most common figure is metaphor.

2. Simile :

Like a locust shrills the imprisoned sap.

Metaphor :

At the Devil's booth are all things sold.

Personification :

Heaven tries earth if it be in tune.

Metonymy :

For a cap and bells our lives we pay.

The Homeric simile is not found.

3. A number of the figures are original.

Examples :

His words were shed softer than leaves from the pine (II, 8).

The wanderer is welcome to the hall

As the hang-bird is to the elm-tree bough (II, 10).

IX. Metre

(a) The metre is iambic pentameter, with frequent substitution of anapests.

(b) There are frequent changes in the metre. Occasional lines of three feet are found. In Part II, stanza 1, the closing lines move more slowly, to suit the thought. In Part II, stanza 8, the opening lines are anapestic, giving a soft, flowing movement, suited to the thought.

(c) No.

(d) Scansion.

∪ — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ —
 And what is so rare | as a day in June?

— ∪ | — ∪ | ∪ — | ∪ —
 Then, | if ever, | come perfect days;

∪ — — | ∪ — — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ —
 Then Heaven tries earth | if it be in tune,

∪ — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ ∪ — | — —
 And over it softly | her warm ear lays

— ∪ | ∪ — — | ∪ — | ∪ ∪ | — ∪
 Whether we look, | or whether we listen,

5

∪ — | — — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ — ∪
 We hear life murmur, | or see it glisten;

— ∪ | — ∪ | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ —
 Every clod | feels a stir of might,

∪ — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ ∪ —
 An instinct within it | that reaches and towers,

∪ — — | ∪ — — | ∪ ∪ — | ∪ ∪ —
 And, | groping blindly above it for light,

— ∪ | ∪ — — | ∪ — — | ∪ — —
 Climbs to a soul | in grass and flowers;

10

X. Characteristics of Author

(a) The poem shows that the author was earnest, sympathetic, philanthropic in spirit, and devout. Earnestness is shown in the general tone of the poem, and its evident lesson. Sympathy is shown in the way the leper is spoken of; philanthropy in the spirit that animates Sir Launfal after the vision. The transformation of the leper and his words to Sir Launfal show a devout spirit. A love of nature is shown in the descriptions, and in the constant use of imagery borrowed from nature.

STUDY OF TENNYSON'S "BUGLE SONG"

II. Classification

- (a) Love lyric.
- (b) Song.

III. Central Theme

- (a) The central theme is the undying power of human love.
- (b) There is no secondary theme.
- (c) The poem has unity.

IV. Mood

The mood is tender, dreamy.

V. Movement

The movement is varied and graceful.

VI. Sound

- (a) It is musical.
- (b) The music is notable for sweetness and delicacy.
- (c) There are no harsh words.

(d) The closing lines of each stanza are imitative in movement. The first words must be pronounced explosively, suggesting the sudden blast of the bugle, while the last words, ending with an unaccented syllable, suggest the sound growing fainter.

(e) Alliteration is found in "snowy summits," "long, light . . . lakes," etc.

(f) The repetend is used, the closing lines of each stanza being repeated with slight variations.

VII. Style

(a) The diction is polished and elevated.

(b) The style in general is clear and direct. The poem is characterized by grace, beauty of sentiment, and beauty of description.

VIII. Structure

(a) It is written in a six-line stanza riming x a x a b b, with internal rime in the x lines. The metre is chiefly iambic.

(b) There is a marked change in metre in the last lines of each stanza, to suggest the sound of the bugle and its echoes.

STUDY OF SHAKSPERE'S "HAMLET"

II. Classification

It is a tragedy.

III. Plot

(a) The plot is simple, dealing entirely with the affairs of Hamlet and those about him, except for the references to Fortinbras, which are hardly important enough to form a sub-plot.

(b) The events are probable, except the appearance of the Ghost, which adds to the interest of the story.

(c) The story is easy to follow.

(d) The source is uncertain. The story is told in Belleforest's Histoires Tragiques, and there was probably an older play called "Hamlet." Shakspeare may have used one or both of these sources.

(e) In Belleforest's version, Hamlet is not killed by Laertes, but becomes king of Denmark, goes to England, marries two wives, and is finally slain in battle. The ending that Shakspeare gives deepens the tragedy, and is dramatically much more effective.

IV. Setting

(a) The events of the play are supposed to occur in 1012 A.D. The time occupied is several months, as Hamlet says in I, 2, 138, that his father had been dead less than two months; in III, 2, 135, Ophelia says it is four months since the king's death, and there must be time after this for Hamlet's sea voyage and return.

(b) The scene is laid at Elsinore, a Danish seaport.

(c) The Danes were not Christians at this time, yet Marcellus speaks of celebrating the Saviour's birth (I, 1, 159). Cannon were not used there so early; they are mentioned in V, 2, 288. Yet these are minor matters, and do not affect the merit of the play.

(d) There is little description in the play. The Ghost is described, I, 2, 200-241; also Hamlet as he appeared to Ophelia, II, 1, 78-100. The place of Ophelia's death is briefly described, IV, 7, 167-173.

V. Character

(a) Hamlet is the central figure; with him are associated Horatio and, at first, Ophelia. Another group is made up of the King and Queen, Polonius, Ophelia, and the others of the court. Ophelia and, to some extent, the Queen serve as connecting links, though the two groups are not really separate.

(b) The characters are clearly distinguished, except Rosencrantz and Guildenstern, whom Shakspeare purposely makes mere dummy men.

(c) The characters are lifelike, so much like real people that we speak of Hamlet as familiarly as of Henry the Eighth: one is as real to us as the other.

(d) Men are the chief characters here, and the catastrophe is through Hamlet's fault, or Hamlet's misfortune.

(e) The First Gravedigger is a humorous character, and Polonius, unconsciously so.

(f) Study of Hamlet's Character, Act I. His first speech (I, 2, 65-66) is bitter, sarcastic. His reply to the King (l. 68) shows him ready with a retort, and his words often have a double meaning: he is quick-witted. The Queen's speech tells us that he has mourned deeply his father's death, showing an affectionate nature. Line 76 shows that he is sincere in his feeling. This appears also in his attitude toward the King: Hamlet does not pretend any affection for him. His soliloquy (l. 129) shows first his melancholy; he is weary of life, yet he is restrained from suicide by his conscience, showing a strong sense of right. His abhorrence of his mother's hasty marriage shows his own high standard of conduct. His greeting of Horatio (l. 162) shows cordiality, but the repeated questions as to why Horatio came, show perhaps a tendency to suspicion.

In Scene 4, lines 8-20, his displeasure at the drunken revels of the court suggests that he himself was refined in nature and temperate in his habits. Lines 22-37 show a tendency to seek for causes, to speculate on various topics: marks of a philosophical turn of mind.

In Scene 5, lines 29-30, he promises instant revenge to the Ghost, yet takes no steps to keep his promise. He lacks steadfastness of purpose. Lines 91-93 show him greatly moved by the Ghost's communication: his nature is highly emotional. Lines 131 and 165 show again his tendency to philosophize. In lines 188-189 he regrets the necessity for action, showing a tendency to shrink from responsibilities.

(g) The chief characters in the play are stationary. The action is too short to allow time for character development.

VI. Structure

(a) Purpose of Scenes.

ACT I

Scene 1 is introductory, preparing us for what is to follow, and arousing interest.

Scene 2 is also preparatory, giving the situation in Denmark, especially the relation of Hamlet to the King and Queen. It also gives indications as to the character of Hamlet.

Scene 3 is also preparatory, giving Hamlet's relations to Ophelia, and the character of Ophelia.

Scene 4 is preparatory: the appearance of the Ghost and its beckoning to Hamlet arouse our interest.

Scene 5 practically begins the main action of the play, for here Hamlet learns of his father's murder, and vows revenge. This scene also reveals Hamlet's character.

ACT II

Scene 1. This gives the character of Polonius and Laertes. The action advances slightly, as we learn of Hamlet's visit to Ophelia, and the characters of both are shown.

Scene 2 introduces a side-action: the employment of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern to spy upon Hamlet. The main action is carried forward by having the speech of the players arouse Hamlet to the need of action. The character of Hamlet is shown in his long soliloquy, and there is preparation for a following scene in his planning the play to catch the King.

ACT III

Scene 1 advances the action, as the King consents to see the play; also Hamlet breaks with Ophelia, and the King determines to send him to England. Hamlet's character is further revealed in his soliloquy.

Scene 2 advances the action, as the King's guilt is made clear. Hamlet's character is shown in his talk with Horatio, and afterward to the Queen and others.

Scene 3 advances the action and displays character in almost equal measure, when Hamlet has an opportunity to execute his vengeance, but turns away.

Scene 4 contains more action than almost any previous scene. Hamlet kills Polonius, and wins the Queen to his side.

ACT IV

Scene 1 hastens the action, as the King, learning of Polonius's death, decides to act at once.

Scene 2 carries forward the action, as Hamlet is summoned to the King.

Scene 3 continues the action, Hamlet being ordered to depart for England. These three scenes all deal with a side-action of the play, — the sending away of Hamlet.

Scene 4 hastens the main action : the sight of the soldiers spurs Hamlet on.

Scene 5 deals with a side-action, — the madness of Ophelia and Laertes's rebellion. Both are results of Act III, Scene 4.

Scene 6 advances the main action, telling of Hamlet's escape and return.

Scene 7 also advances the action, as the King and Laertes plan the death of Hamlet.

ACT V

Scene 1. The first part is a relief scene, the humorous dialogue heightening, by contrast, what follows. The action advances, as Hamlet and Laertes are brought together.

Scene 2 carries on the action by Hamlet's agreeing to the match ; then events follow each other rapidly, — the death of the Queen, of the King, of Laertes, and of Hamlet.

(b) Hamlet wishes to accomplish the death of his uncle ; his motive is to avenge his father's murder. He is opposed by his own nature, his weakness of will, his fatal tendency to think instead of act.

(c) The climax is in Act III, Scene 2, where Hamlet is convinced of the King's guilt.

(d) The rising action begins in Act I, Scene 5. The turning-point is in Act III, Scene 3, where Hamlet lets slip the chance of killing the King.

(e) The falling action is manifest in the close of Act III, Scene 5, where Hamlet appears willing to go to England, apparently forgetting all about his revenge.

(f) Dramatic foreshadowing is seen in III, 4, 208, where we have a hint of the fate of Rosencrantz and Guildenstern ; and in V, 2, 220, where Hamlet's own death is foreshadowed in the words,

But thou wouldst not think how ill's all here about my heart.

VII. Contrast

(a) Contrast in character is shown between Hamlet and Laertes, — Hamlet thoughtful, slow to act ; Laertes impulsive, acting without reflection. There is contrast also between Hamlet and Fortinbras in activity. King Claudius is contrasted strongly with the former king. There is contrast between Hamlet as he appears here and as he had been formerly. Contrast in mood is found in Act V, Scene 1, where the jesting of the gravediggers is followed by Ophelia's funeral.

(b) Rosencrantz and Guildenstern are characters so closely parallel that it is hardly possible to distinguish them. There is parallel in incident in the fact that both Hamlet and Laertes lose a father.

VIII. Metre

(a) Scansion of lines 120-130, Act III, Scene 4 :

— —| — —| — —| — —| — —

Do not forget : | this visitation

120

— —| — —| — —| — —| — —| — —

Is but to whet | thy almost blunted purpose.

— —| — —| — —| — —| — —| — —

But, | look, | amazement on thy mother sits :

— —| — —| — —| — —| — —| — —

O, | step between her | and her fighting soul :

— —| — —| — —| — —| — —| — —

Conceit in weakest bodies | strongest works :

— —| — —| — —| — —

Speak to her, | Hamlet.

— | — ∪ | ∪ ∪ | — ∪
How is it with you, | lady ? 125

∪ — | — — | ∪ —
Alas, | how is't with you,
∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ —
That you do bend your eye on vacancy
∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ —
And with the incorporal air | do hold discourse ?
— ∪ | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ —
Forth at your eyes | your spirits wildly peep ;
— ∪ | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ —
And, | as the sleeping soldiers | in the alarm 130

The position of the cæsure, marked thus | , is regular in the first two lines ; in line 122 it is in and after the first foot ; in line 123 it is in the first and in the third ; in line 124 it is in the fourth foot, and so on.

Trochaic feet are substituted in lines 123, 125, 126, etc. Spondees are found in lines 120, 123, 125, etc. Pyrrhic feet occur in lines 120, 122, 123, etc. The extra syllable is found in line 121. Line 125 is divided between two speakers, and, as often in such cases, has extra syllables. Line 120 is run-on, the others end-stopt.

(b) Lyrics in the play are Ophelia's songs, in Act IV, Scene 5, and the snatches of song sung by the clown in Act V, Scene 1.

(c) Prose is used in Act II, Scene 2, and elsewhere where Hamlet feigns madness ; it is used in Act III, Scene 2, for Hamlet's advice to the players, which, being purely didactic, is hardly suited for poetic form ; when Horatio enters, however, the dialogue is on a higher level, more emotional, and naturally rises to blank verse. The play within the play, Act III, Scene 2, is written in rime, to distinguish it from the play proper.

IX. Style

(a) The language of the play is not always clear. Sometimes the obscurity is due to obsolete words, sometimes to the thought; but the meaning is usually clear after a little study.

(b) Biblical allusions are found occasionally. In V, 2, 231, the saying "there's a special providence in the fall of a sparrow" is a reference to Matt. x. 29: "Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? and one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father." Other examples are I, 2, 131, and V, 1, 40.

(c) Examples of poetic diction are: "mine arm"; "thrice"; "oft"; "hath," — all in II, 1, 90-110.

(d) There is no marked use of dialect, though the opening of Act V, Scene 1, approaches it.

(e) Humor occurs in the dialogue between Hamlet and Polonius, Act II, Scene 2; the dialogue between Hamlet and Rosencrantz and Guildenstern in Act III, Scene 2; and in the dialogue of the clowns in Act V, Scene 1. Here the humor serves to deepen the tragedy by contrast.

(f) Pathos is found in the appearance of Ophelia in a state of madness, in Act IV, Scene 5.

(g) The style is not at the same level throughout, but rises and falls with the speakers, or the nature of the discourse. In Act IV, Scene 4, the dialogue between Hamlet and the Captain is in a plain style, but Hamlet's soliloquy at the close is in a strain of exalted poetry.

STUDY OF GEORGE ELIOT'S "SILAS MARNER"

II. Title

The title names the principal character.

III. Purpose

(a) To entertain, by presenting a faithful picture of human life, and to teach a moral lesson.

(b) The lesson is that when men's hearts have been hardened by their wrongs, a little child is often the means of leading them back into natural human relations. It is stated at the close of Chapter XV.

(c) The purpose is not made too prominent.

IV. Plot

(a) The story is interesting, and the interest does not flag.

(b) It is probable.

(c) The plot is complex. Silas and the poor folk of the village form one group, the Cass family another. The two groups are connected, first by Dunstan Cass, who robs Silas, then by Eppie.

(d) The movement is usual. It is slow in the beginning of the book, but quickens in telling how Silas was accused of theft. It is sometimes retarded by description, as at the beginning of Chapter III, and by discussion of character, as at the close of that chapter.

(e) The story progresses steadily from the beginning. There is a pause between Part I and Part II, but no break in the story.

(f) The climax occurs where Silas brings Eppie into the ballroom, and Nancy asks Godfrey whose child it is. Minor climaxes are the theft of the gold and the finding of Dunstan Cass's body.

(g) Suspense is used at the close of Chapter XII.

(h) At the close of Chapter XVII the coming blow is foreshadowed.

(i) The story ends happily for the chief characters.

(j) The best chapters are VI, XI, and XIV.

V. Characters

(a) The characters are numerous, yet they are kept distinct.

(b) They are drawn from the middle and lower classes of society ; perhaps the author is most successful with the lower classes.

(c) The women are more fully drawn than the men : Nancy is clearer to us than Godfrey. The author shows great power in depicting children.

(d) The characters in general are lifelike.

(e) They are not exceptional people.

(f) There is no tendency to caricature.

(g) None of the characters are historical.

(h) Both good and evil traits are shown in the same person, e.g. Godfrey Cass.

(i) The characters are consistent.

(j) Development is shown in the principal characters, notably in Silas Marner. At first trusting and affectionate, he becomes suspicious, selfish, miserly. Then by the coming of Eppie he is won back to his old self. The experiences he passes through are adequate to account for these changes.

(k) Both the dramatic and the analytic methods are used here: the dramatic in the interview between the two brothers in Chapter III; the analytic in the comment upon Godfrey at the close of this chapter.

(l) The novel has no hero, in the old-fashioned sense. The principal character is Silas Marner; his chief trait is his simple devotion, first to his friend, then to Eppie. There is no heroine.

(m) The traits of character the author seems to admire most are fidelity to duty, moral courage, and kindness.

(n) There are no supernatural characters.

(o) Women occupy almost as prominent a place as men.

(p) The story does not tell about the final fortunes of the characters.

VI. Classification

It is a novel.

VII. Description

(a) There are some long descriptive passages in the story, but they are so mingled with narrative, as in the account of the arrival of the guests in Chapter XI, that the interest is sustained.

(b) There is almost no description of nature ; touches are found in Chapters I and XVII.

(c) There is little local color.

(d) Description is used for dramatic background, when Silas appears at the ball with Eppie.

(e) In describing people, the method used is that of selected details, as the description of Silas in Chapter I.

(f) The author's strength lies in narration and character drawing.

VIII. Contrast

Contrast in plot is found in Chapters XI and XII. Just when Godfrey is at the ball, happy in Nancy's company, his wife is coming through the storm to expose and disgrace him. There is contrast in character between Silas Marner as a miser and Silas after the coming of Eppie.

IX. Style

A. Style in General

1. The style is not strongly individual.
2. Epigrams occur in the dialogue, e.g. "As I say, Mr. Have-your-own-way is the best husband, and the only one I'd ever promise to obey." (Chapter XI.)
3. Humor, usually quiet, sometimes broad, is one of the strong points of the book. Good examples are found in Chapter VI.
4. Pathos is found in the account of Silas's unjust condemnation (Chapter I), and in his grief at the loss of his gold (Chapter X).
5. The style in general is direct, and at times animated, as in the dialogue between the brothers in Chapter III.
6. It has clearness, force, and beauty ; it can hardly be said that one quality is more marked than another.

B. Diction

1. There are a few unfamiliar words, such as "dis-train," "exiguity," "vicinage."
2. Dialect is used, but it is not difficult to read. It makes the characters more real ; they speak as you feel country people would speak.
3. The conversation is natural.

4. The diction, aside from the parts in dialogue, is elevated.

X. Characteristics of Author

Judging from this book alone, one might infer that the author was a person of high ideals, earnest, sympathetic, possessing a vivid imagination, a keen sense of humor, and having a tendency to philosophize.

STUDY OF MACAULAY'S ESSAY ON SAMUEL JOHNSON

II. Classification

It is a narrative essay.

III. Structure

(a) There is no introduction : Macaulay takes up his subject in the first sentence.

(b) The subject is the life, writings, and character of Samuel Johnson. The essay has unity, and there are no digressions.

(c) The final paragraph serves as a conclusion. It is a summary, giving a final estimate of Johnson's writings and character.

IV. Essay as a Whole

A. Narrative Essay

1. The thought is easy to follow. The events are told in the order of time.

2. There is little description of places. Lichfield, Johnson's birthplace, is merely named. His home is briefly described in ¶ 40.

3. The descriptions of persons are vivid and detailed. Examples are found in ¶¶ 1, 3, 5, 7.

4. The author makes Johnson real to us: a good example is the closing paragraph.

5. Macaulay perhaps dwells too much upon Johnson's shortcomings. This is seen by comparing this essay with Carlyle's essay on Boswell's Johnson.

V. Style

A. Style in General

1. It possesses individuality.

2. There is occasional quiet humor; e.g. "Indeed, the great man was sometimes provoked into fits of passion, in which he said things that the small man, during a few hours, seriously resented." (¶ 39.)

3. Pathos is found in ¶¶ 5 and 51.

4. Irony is occasionally found, e.g. ". . . an old lady named Williams, whose chief recommendations were her blindness and her poverty." (¶ 40.) Ridicule is found in the description of Mrs. Johnson, ¶ 7.

5. Figures of speech are frequent, and add force to the style. Example: ". . . an absent awkward scholar, . . . who dressed like a scarecrow and ate like a cormorant." (¶ 19.) See other examples in ¶¶ 22 and 43.

6. The essay is marked by occasional exaggeration, e.g. when he says of Johnson's Shakspeare, "It would be difficult to name a more slovenly, a more worthless, edition of any great classic." (§ 37.) Prejudice is seen in § 13, where Macaulay's Whig tendencies appear.

7. The style is direct, animated, balanced, rhetorical, and clear.

8. Clearness and force are the qualities most marked.

B. Quotation and Allusion

1. There are but few quotations in the essay. Aside from Johnson himself, the only author quoted is Ossian. (§ 41.)

2. Allusion is found. In § 13, in the words, "such as inflamed the Capulets against the Montagues" there is an allusion to Romeo and Juliet. Other examples are found in §§ 25 and 33.

C. Paragraphs

1. The paragraphs are long, averaging over two hundred words.

2. They usually possess unity, though §§ 1, 38, and 40 lack it.

3. They are usually linked, e.g. §§ 15 and 16.

4. They follow in logical order.

D. Sentences

1. His sentences are always clear, and seldom involved in structure.

2. They are rather short, averaging twenty-six words.
3. They possess unity.
4. They are generally loose, about one-third being periodic.
5. Balanced sentences are used frequently, e.g. "Garrick now brought Irene out, with alterations sufficient to displease the author, yet not sufficient to make the piece pleasing to the audience." (§ 22.) "The Dictionary, although it raised Johnson's fame, added nothing to his pecuniary means." (§ 29.)
6. Exclamation and interrogation are not found.
7. Antithesis is very common; the sentences quoted under No. 5 above are examples. Climax is infrequently used. An example is found in § 13: "... A writer who had taken but one-tenth part of the license allowed to him would have been pillored, mangled with the shears, whipped at the cart's tail, and flung into a noisome dungeon to die."
8. Epigrams are rare. Example: "... the place of books in the public estimation is fixed not by what is written about them, but by what is written in them." § 42.

E. Words

1. There are almost no unusual words. "Sponging-house" is an example of a word now obsolete.
2. The author's vocabulary is copious.

3. He uses words precisely, as in ¶ 27, "a show of zealous and at the same time of delicate and judicious kindness."

4. He prefers specific to general words, e.g., in ¶ 16. "Richard Savage . . . , who had feasted among blue ribbons in St. James's Square, and had lain with fifty pounds' weight of irons on his legs in the condemned ward of Newgate." Another writer might have said that Savage had known both extremes of society. Macaulay gives specific details instead of a general statement.

5. He does not use Biblical forms of speech.

6. His diction is clear, simple, and idiomatic.

VI. Memory Passages

Paragraphs 5, 39, and 52 are worth memorizing as significant in subject-matter and as good examples of Macaulay's style.

VII. Characteristics of Author

From this essay, one would infer that the author was somewhat prejudiced (¶ 13), positive in his opinions (¶ 46), and that he was a man of much learning (¶¶ 33, 37).

STUDY OF WEBSTER'S BUNKER HILL MONUMENT ORATION

II. Structure

The parts of the oration are not clearly marked, yet the first five paragraphs may be considered introductory. The conclusion begins with ¶ 41.

III. The Introduction

This serves to arouse interest in the subject.

IV. The Discussion

(a) The central theme is twofold, liberty and union. It is set forth in ¶¶ 18, 20, 35, and 44. It is not introduced sooner because the first part of the oration would naturally deal with the occasion they met to celebrate.

(b) Webster appeals chiefly to the emotions of his audience, arousing feelings of gratitude, of veneration, and of patriotism. Examples are found in ¶¶ 5, 14, 17, 25.

(c) He appeals to men on high grounds, as seen in the four concluding paragraphs.

(d) There is a slight digression in ¶ 37, where the orator turns to express sympathy for Greece. This is justified, as the struggle of Greece was for liberty.

V. The Peroration

(a) This serves to restate the two main themes of the oration—liberty and union—and makes a well-rounded close.

(b) The style is somewhat more elevated than elsewhere.

VI. Style

A. Style in General

1. It is not markedly individual.
2. There is no humor, nor would it be expected on such an occasion.
3. Pathos occurs in ¶¶ 13, 14.
4. None of these qualities are found, nor would they be expected.
5. Figures of speech are used frequently, and very effectively. Example: "A great chord of sentiment and feeling runs through two continents, and vibrates over both." (¶ 28.) A good example is also found in ¶ 31.
6. By none, in any marked degree.
7. The style is smooth, orotund, direct, at times animated, as in ¶ 12; balanced; somewhat rhetorical; clear; at times poetic, as in ¶ 28; and always dignified.

8. Force and clearness are the qualities most marked. The sentences would deliver well; the longer ones are frequently rhythmical.

B. Quotation and Allusion

1. The author quotes from Milton, Horace, and Vergil. The quotations are accurate.

2. Biblical allusion occurs in ¶ 40, in the phrase "at the mighty bidding of the voice of political liberty the waters of darkness retire."

C. Paragraphs

1. Webster's paragraphs are somewhat long, averaging two hundred words.

2. They usually possess unity, though ¶ 21 lacks it.

3. They are usually linked. Examples are ¶¶ 21-27.

4. They are arranged in logical order.

D. Sentences

1. They are always clear, and usually simple in structure.

2. Some of the sentences are unusually long; the average length is thirty-one words.

3. They have unity.

4. Periodic sentences are frequent, nearly half being in that form.

5. Balanced sentences are frequent, e.g. "Nearer to our times, more closely connected with our fates, and therefore still more interesting to our feelings and affections, is the settlement of our own country. . . ." (§ 4.)

6. Exclamatory sentences are frequent, e.g. §§ 12 and 14, where they are used to express heightened emotion. Interrogation is not used.

7. Antithesis is occasionally found, e.g. "Death might come in honor on the field, it might come in disgrace on the scaffold." (§ 19.) Climax is rather frequent. Good examples are §§ 3, 7, and 31.

8. Epigram is occasionally found: perhaps the best example is in the last paragraph of the speech: "Let our object be Our Country, Our Whole Country, and nothing but Our Country."

E. Words

1. There are very few unusual words. "Entablatures" is an example.

2. The author's vocabulary is copious.

3. He uses words precisely.

4. General terms are used rather than specific terms, e.g. in § 4 he uses general words instead of naming Plymouth and Jamestown.

5. Biblical forms of speech are occasionally found, as "cloud of witnesses." (§ 6.)

6. The diction is clear, polished, and eloquent.

VII. Memory Passages

Paragraphs 7 and 44 are recommended for memorizing.

VIII. Characteristics of Author

(a) Judging from this oration, one would infer that Webster was an earnest, broad-minded patriotic man.

Earnestness is shown in the tone of the whole oration, particularly in the closing paragraphs. Broad-mindedness is seen in ¶¶ 27-37 ; patriotism in ¶ 18 and elsewhere.

(b) He possessed a vivid imagination, as is shown by his constant use of imagery, and in the description of the battle in ¶ 12. A philosophical turn of mind is shown in ¶¶ 7 and 28.

(c) None of these characteristics are shown in any marked degree.

APPENDIX A

FIGURES OF SPEECH

A Figure of Speech is a departure from a literal mode of making statements, usually in such a way as to call up in the reader's mind a figure or image. For example, if one says it is raining heavily, he states a fact literally; but if he says it is coming down in bucketfuls, he uses a figure of speech.

The simplest form of figure is the Simile, in which a comparison is made between things of different kinds.

Examples :

Let thy voice rise like a fountain for me night and day.

Unstable as water, thou shalt not excel.

Note that not every comparison is a Simile. To say that a girl sings like Jenny Lind is not a Simile, because the comparison is between things of the same kind : one person's voice is compared to another's. But to say she sings like a nightingale is to use a Simile.

* A Simile is a comparison between two objects of different kinds.

When a Simile is continued through several lines, being expanded into a little picture in itself, it is called a Homeric Simile. An example is Tennyson's description of the rush of knights in combat :

All together down upon him
Bare, as a wild wave in the wide North Sea,
Green-glimmering toward the summit, bears, with all
Its stormy crests that smoke against the skies,
Down on a bark, and overbears the bark
And him that helms it; so they overbore
Sir Lancelot and his charger.

— Lancelot and Elaine.

This form of Simile receives its name from its use by Homer, and has been a favorite in epic poetry.

Closely allied to the Simile is the Metaphor, or implied Simile. If I say, "You should hear that girl sing; she is a perfect nightingale," I do not compare her to a nightingale, but call her one. The likeness is taken for granted, and the name of one object is applied to the other.

* A Metaphor is a figure of speech in which the name of one object is applied to another which it resembles.

Examples of Metaphor :

His face was an open book.

Talent is a cistern, genius is a fountain.

Some books are to be tasted, others to be swallowed, and some few to be chewed and digested.

Personification is a form of Metaphor in which a lifeless object, an abstract idea, or one of the lower animals, is spoken of as a person.

Examples :

The Earth groaned beneath her load.

Night dropped her sable curtain down.

The Lion said, "I am the king of beasts."

The Simile, Metaphor, and Personification are all founded on some likeness between objects. In the Metonymy there is no likeness, but the name of one object is put for another that is closely connected with it. If I say, "Beware of the bottle," every one understands that I mean liquor. The word bottle suggests liquor, because the two things are closely connected.

Metonymy is a figure in which, instead of naming an object, we name something closely related to it, which suggests it.

Examples :

Who steals my purse steals trash.

He was a man of sixty winters.

When a part of an object is used for the whole, or a whole for the part, the figure is called Synecdoche.

Examples :

He wants to hire another hand.

Twenty sail swept into the harbor.

It is evident that this is but a special form of Metonymy, and most writers make no distinction between the two.

The Apostrophe is a figure of speech in which the absent are addressed as present, or inanimate objects as if animate and present.

Examples :

Milton ! thou shouldst be living at this hour.

With how sad steps, O Moon, thou climb'st the sky.

The Apostrophe is often combined with Personification, as in the last example. It differs from Personification in that one may apostrophise a person absent, or one dead, as in the first example above, and in such a case there is no personification.

The Hyperbole is an obvious exaggeration.

Examples :

I have been waiting for you for ages.

Rivers of waters shall run from mine eyes.

APPENDIX B

VERSIFICATION

I. Rime

Rime is a correspondence of sound at the ends of lines.

In English verse the law of rime is, that the last accented vowel and the sounds following it should correspond, but the preceding sounds should differ. Thus :

Nature with folded hands seemed there,
Kneeling at her evening prayer.

Here the rime-vowel is the sound of ā as found in "prayer" and "there." In each word it is followed by the "r" sound, and in each word the preceding sounds are different, as required by the law of rime. Often the accented vowel forms the last syllable of the line, as :

And all the broad leaves over me
Clapped their little hands in glee.

When the accented vowels do not correspond exactly in sound, the result is called imperfect rime. This is seen in the first and third lines below :

There is no light in earth or heaven
But the cold light of stars ;

And the first watch of night is given
To the red planet Mars.

Imperfect rime is generally considered a fault, though when the riming lines alternate, as above, it does not offend the ear as much as if the lines were consecutive.

When there is a correspondence of sounds at the beginning of words, it is called Alliteration. Example :

Softly sweet, in liquid measures,
Soon he soothed their souls to pleasures.
The ceaseless booming of the sullen sea.

Observe that in Alliteration, as in Rime, it is not the letters that correspond, but the sounds. In the last line above, for example, the letter c alliterates with s ; in other cases c and k may form Alliteration.

Rime may be masculine, feminine, or triple. When a single syllable in each line corresponds, the rime is masculine, as :

Wilt thou seal up the avenues of ill ?
Pay every debt as if God wrote the bill.

— EMERSON.

When two syllables in each line correspond in sound, the rime is feminine, as :

If eyes were made for seeing,
Then beauty is its own excuse for being.

— EMERSON.

The terms single and double rime are sometimes used instead of masculine and feminine.

Triple rime is less common. It is found in alternate lines of Hood's "Bridge of Sighs":

Take her up tenderly,
Lift her with care ;
Fashioned so slenderly,
Young, and so fair !

Rime sometimes occurs within the line. This is called internal rime. An example is seen in the third line below :

They reel, they roll, in clanging lists,
And when the tide of combat stands,
Perfume and flowers fall in showers,
That lightly rain from ladies' hands. — TENNYSON.

II. Stanza Forms

By means of rime single lines are grouped into stanzas. The simplest form is the couplet, two lines bound together by rime, illustrated by quotations from Emerson above. The couplet, however, is not regarded as a stanza.

The stanza of three lines, called the triplet, is not common. Example :

Greatly begin ! though thou have time
But for a line, be that sublime, —
Not failure, but low aim, is crime. — LOWELL.

The stanza of four lines is the one most commonly used in English verse. It may rime in various ways. The rime-order may be designated by letters, using the same letter to designate lines that rime together, and the letter x for lines that do not rime. Thus :

I give you the end of a golden string, (x)

Only wind it into a ball, (a)

It will lead you in at Heaven's gate, (x)

Built in Jerusalem wall. (a)—WILLIAM BLAKE.

Another common form of four-line stanza is a b a b, as :

I find earth not gray, but rosy, (a)

Heaven not grim, but fair of hue. (b)

Do I stoop ? I pluck a posy. (a)

Do I stand and stare ? All's blue. (b)

—ROBERT BROWNING.

This form is called the quatrain.

Less common is the form a b b a, used in Tennyson's In Memoriam, as :

Thou wilt not leave us in the dust ;

Thou madest man, he knows not why ;

He thinks he was not made to die ;

And thou hast made him : thou art just.

The form a a x a is found in Edward Fitzgerald's version of Omar Khayyam, as :

I sometimes think that never blows so red

The rose as where some buried Cæsar bled ;

That every hyacinth the garden wears

Dropp'd in her lap from some once lovely head.

The chief stanzas of English verse, besides the ones enumerated, are Rime Royal, consisting of seven lines, riming ab ab bcc, used in Chaucer's "Prioresses Tale," and the Spenserian stanza of nine lines, riming ab ab bc bcc, eight lines in iambic pentameter, the ninth an Alexandrine. This is used in Spenser's Faerie Queene.

The Sonnet is a poem of fourteen lines, written in iambic pentameter. It is usually made up of two parts: the first eight lines, called the octave, and the concluding six, the sestet. The rime-order of the octave is usually abba abba; the sestet may rime in various ways, but not in couplets, if the sonnet have the true Italian form. There is another form of sonnet, called the Shaksperian, which admits a couplet at the close, the rime-order here being abab cdcd efef gg. The Shaksperian sonnet also lacks the division into octave and sestet.

More important, however, than the metrical structure of the Sonnet is the law of unity of thought. The Sonnet should be the expression of a single idea or emotion. This is well seen in Wordsworth's "Sonnet Composed upon Westminster Bridge: Early Morning."

Earth has not anything to show more fair;
Dull would he be of soul who could pass by
A sight so touching in its majesty;
This city now doth like a garment wear
The beauty of the morning; silent, bare,
Ships, towers, domes, theatres and temples lie
Open unto the fields and to the sky;
All bright and glittering in the smokeless air.
Never did sun more beautifully steep
In his first splendor, valley, rock, or hill;
Ne'er saw I, never felt, a calm so deep!
The river glideth at his own sweet will:
Dear God! the very houses seem asleep,
And all that mighty heart is lying still!

It will be observed that this sonnet expresses a single emotion, and that the emotion deepens as the sonnet progresses. In these respects it is typical of nearly all good sonnets.

III. Metre

Poetry is distinguished from prose by having the words arranged in such a way as to cause a regular recurrence of accented syllables. Read these lines aloud :

Serene I fold my hands and wait,
Nor care for wind or tide or sea ;
I rave no more 'gainst time or fate,
For lo, my own shall come to me.

— JOHN BURROUGHS.

Without thinking of it, you accent the last syllable of “serene,” and the words “fold,” “hands,” and “wait,” making four accents in that line, with an unaccented syllable between each. In the second line you accent “care,” “wind,” “tide,” and “sea,” — again four accents, separated by four unaccented syllables ; and so with the other lines. If we mark the accented syllables thus — and the unaccented ones thus \cup , we have :

\cup — \cup — \cup — \cup —
Serene I fold my hands and wait,
 \cup — \cup — \cup — \cup —
Nor care for wind or tide or sea ;

The syllables seem to fall naturally into groups of two, each group consisting of an unaccented followed by an accented syllable. These groups are called feet, and this particular kind of foot is called an iambus, or an iambic foot.

In the following lines the metre is somewhat different :

\cup $_$ | \cup \cup $_$ | \cup \cup $_$ | \cup \cup $_$
 His words were shed softer than leaves from the pine.

The first foot is iambic, but the others have two unaccented syllables, thus $\cup \cup _$. This foot is called an anapest. Anapestic feet and iambic feet are often found mingled in one poem; in naming the metre we give only the foot that predominates.

Another form of metre is :

$_$ \cup | $_$ \cup | $_$ \cup | $_$ \cup
 Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures,
 $_$ \cup | $_$ \cup | $_$ \cup | $_$ \cup
 While the landscape round it measures.

This foot, $_ \cup$, is called a trochee, and such verse trochaic verse. It is just the reverse of the iambic foot. Trochaic and iambic feet are sometimes mingled, as in Milton's "L'Allegro" just quoted.

Resembling the trochee is the dactyl, $_ \cup \cup$, found in Evangeline.

$_$ \cup \cup | $_$ \cup \cup | $_$ \cup \cup | $_$ \cup
 Black were her eyes as the berry that grows on \cup | $_$ \cup \cup | $_$ \cup
 the thorn by the wayside.

Trochaic feet are often found in dactylic verse. In the dactylic hexameter the sixth foot, as above, is regularly a foot of two syllables, either spondee or trochee.

It is a mistake to suppose that scanning consists merely in determining the metre of a poem, and then marking off all the feet as regularly iambic or trochaic. You can scarcely read four lines of any poem without finding a foot that is not regular. Take, for example, Portia's speech in The Merchant of Venice :

The quality of mercy is not strained.

That begins as iambic metre ; the first three feet are regular iambics, and it is easy to go on and mark the rest iambic. But this would bring the accent upon the word "is," where it does not belong in reading. If the line is read to bring out its meaning, the accents will fall upon "not" and upon "strained." The line would be scanned thus :

∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ ∪ | — —
 The quality of mercy is not strained.

This gives us two irregular feet. The fourth foot is composed of two unaccented syllables. This is called a Pyrrhic foot. The fifth foot is composed of two accented syllables. This is called a Spondee. Both Spondees and Pyrrhics are frequently found in iambic and trochaic verse. They are not used alone.

In scanning, one should first read the lines aloud, so as to bring out their meaning, and then mark the accents as they fall, not making a mere mechanical division to fit a certain type of foot.

Frequently a line is found in which one syllable is lacking, either at the beginning or end. For example :

∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ —
 And oft as if her head she bowed,
 — | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪ —
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.

The first line has eight syllables, the second but seven. Such a line is called Catalectic, or incomplete. Or a line may have an additional syllable, usually unaccented. This is common in Shakspeare, e.g. :

— ∪ | ∪ — | ∪ ∪ | ∪ — | ∪ — | ∪
 O if thou teach me to believe this sorrow.

This line has eleven syllables ; the regular number in blank verse is ten. Such a line is called Hypercatalectic.

There is usually a slight pause at the end of a line of poetry. There is also frequently a pause within the line. This is called a Cæsura. The Cæsura is usually marked by punctuation, though not always.

In the opening lines of Paradise Lost the Cæsuras are as follows :

Of man's first disobedience, | and the fruit
 Of that forbidden tree, | whose mortal taste
 Brought death into the world, | and all our woe,

With loss of Eden, | till one greater Man
Restore us, | and regain the blissful seat,
Sing, | Heavenly Muse, | that, | on the secret top
Of Oreb, | or of Sinai, | did'st inspire
That shepherd

The Cæsura is best observed by reading the lines aloud. It may occur in any place in the line. In the first line above, it is in the fourth foot ; in the next line, after the third foot ; in the fourth line it is in the third foot ; in the fifth line, it is in the second foot. The poet purposely varies the position of the pause to vary the music of his lines. A line may have two or more Cæsuras, as the sixth line above. Or there may be a line without a Cæsura, as Too well I see and rue the dire event.

But the absence of punctuation does not always indicate that there is no Cæsura. In the following line there is no punctuation, yet it is impossible to read it without pausing after "destruction" : —

In horrible destruction | laid thus low.

Further, the music of the verse may be varied by the alternation of end-stopt and run-on lines. An end-stopt line is one with a pause at the end, usually indicated by some mark of punctuation. A run-on line is read with the following line with but the slightest pause, merely sufficient to mark the line-unit. In the passage from Paradise Lost quoted above, the first two lines are run-on, the third end-stopt, the fourth run-on, and so on.

In giving the metre of a poem it is customary to indicate not only the kind of feet, but the number in a line. A line of one foot is called a monometer line ; of two feet dimeter ; of three, trimeter ; of four, tetrameter ; of five, pentameter ; of six, hexameter ; of seven, heptameter. In order, then, to describe fully the metrical structure of a poem, it is necessary to state (a) the kind of feet, (b) the number of feet in a line, and (c) the rime-order. Thus Gray's "Elegy" would be described metrically as a poem in iambic pentameter, riming abab.

Metre is indicated in hymn books by the letters C.M., L.M., etc. C.M., or Common Metre, is a four-line stanza, iambic tetrameter alternating with iambic trimeter. Long Metre (L.M.) is iambic tetrameter. Short Metre (S.M.) is a four-line stanza, iambic, the first two lines trimeter, the third line tetrameter, the fourth trimeter. Hallelujah Metre (H.M.) is made up of four iambic trimeter lines followed by two iambic tetrameter lines. The trochaic measures are indicated by figures ; thus 7s means seven syllables, or trochaic tetrameter catalectic ; 8s and 7s means trochaic tetrameter, the alternate lines being catalectic ; 6s means trochaic trimeter, etc. ; the figures in each case indicating the number of syllables.

APPENDIX C

LIST OF RECOMMENDED READING

If the study of a piece of literature is pursued in the proper spirit, it will awaken in the student a desire for a further knowledge of the author's works. If he goes to the library and takes down a complete edition, he may open the book at some juvenile work, or at something which is difficult in style, or is remote from his experience, and therefore uninteresting. He is disappointed, and perhaps fails to find the beauty or the inspiration that awaits him, simply for want of proper direction. To give this direction is the aim of this list of recommended reading. It does not purport to be a complete list of the best books, nor to include all of the best of each author, but it does aim to give, for the chief writers in English and American literature, selections that are fairly representative of the author, and that are adapted to serve as an introduction to the author's work. To this end, every selection has been submitted to a twofold test: first, that it be a classic work ; and second, that it possess sufficient interest to make its reading not a task but a pleasure.

It is hoped that the list may prove of service also to classes studying the history of English and American literature. It is generally agreed that such study should be accompanied by a generous amount of reading in the chief authors. Few text-books, however, indicate definitely just what should be read, and their references are apt to include a number of long works, entirely beyond the power of the student to cover. Care has been taken in preparing this list to require no more than the average student may be able to read. Novels, of course, form an exception to this rule ; no specimen can do justice to a work of fiction. In the case of minor poets who live by a few brief lyrics, like Carew and Suckling, it has not seemed necessary to give explicit references, since their best work is all to be found in Palgrave's Golden Treasury. The arrangement of the poems is, approximately, the order in which they should be read.

I. English Literature

Chaucer, Geoffrey, 1340(?)–1400.

Canterbury Tales.

The Prologue.

Pardoner's Tale.

Man of Law's Tale.

Clerk's Tale.

Nun's Priest's Tale.

Minor Poems :

Truth (Ballad of Good Counsel).

Complaint to His Purse.

Ballads, English and Scottish. Fifteenth century.

Sir Patrick Spens.

Nut-brown Maid.

Chevy Chase (Modern Ballad of).

Robin Hood and Guy of Gisborne.

Waly, Waly.

King Estmere.

Edom o' Gordon.

Adam Bell, Clym of the Clough, etc.

The Heir of Linne.

Fair Margaret and Sweet William.

These may be found in Percy's Reliques of Ancient English Poetry, or in Roberts's Legendary Ballads of England and Scotland. Many of them are given in Ward's English Poets, Vol. I.

Spenser, Edmund, 1552-1599.Faerie Queene :

Book I, Cantos 1, 2, 3, 4.

Minor Poems :

Epithalamion.

The Oak and the Brere, in Shepherd's Calendar,
February, ll. 102 to end.

Bacon, Francis, 1561-1626.Essays :

Of Truth.

Revenge.

Adversity.

Great Place.

Marriage and Single Life.

Atheism.

Travel.

Dispatch.

Friendship.

Riches.

Studies.

Marlowe, Christopher, 1564-1593.

Doctor Faustus.

Shakspere, William, 1564-1616.

One play at least from each of the following groups should be read.

Comedies :

Merchant of Venice.

As You Like It.

Midsummer Night's Dream.

The Tempest.

Tragedies :

Julius Cæsar.

King Lear.

Romeo and Juliet.

Macbeth.

Othello.

Hamlet.

Historical Plays :

King Henry V.

Richard II.

King Henry IV, Parts I and II.

Poems :

The Sonnets, especially numbers 12, 18, 29, 30, 32, 33, 54, 55, 57, 60, 64, 65, 66, 70, 71, 73, 87, 94,
98, 99, 104, 106, 116.

Herrick, Robert, 1591-1634.

To Daffodils.

Mad Maid's Song.

To Primroses Fill'd with Dew.

His Poetrie His Pillar.

To the Virgins.	To Dianeme.
The Rock of Rubies.	Delight in Disorder.
Cherry Ripe.	The Hag.
To Anthea. ("Bid me to live.")
A Thanksgiving to God.
Corinna's Going a-Maying.
His Litany.	To Blossoms.
Night-Piece to Julia.	The White Island.
To Violets.	To Keep a True Lent.

Milton, John, 1608-1674.

Paradise Lost, Books I and II.

This may be read to advantage in the edition in the Academy series (Allyn and Bacon). The introduction gives the story of the whole poem, thus placing the first books in their proper relation.

Minor Poems:

On the Morning of Christ's Nativity.

L'Allegro. Comus.

Il Penseroso. Lycidas.

Sonnets: Numbers VII, VIII, XVI, XVIII, XIX, XXII, XXIII.

Bunyan, John, 1628-1688.

Pilgrim's Progress.

Grace Abounding to the Chief of Sinners.

Dryden, John, 1631-1700.

Alexander's Feast.

Song for St. Cecilia's Day.

Lines under the Portrait of Milton.

Mac Flecknoe.

Absalom and Achitophel. (Sketches of Achitophel and of Zimri.)

Swift, Jonathan, 1667-1745.

Gulliver's Travels:

The Voyage to Lilliput.

Journal to Stella:

Letters 10, 31, 63.

Addison, Joseph, 1672-1719.

De Coverley Papers, from The Spectator.

De Foe, Daniel, 1661 (?) - 1731.

Robinson Crusoe.

Pope, Alexander, 1688-1744.

Essay on Man, Epistle I and IV.

Rape of the Lock.

Essay on Criticism, Sec. I and II.

Ode on St. Cecilia's Day.

The Universal Prayer.

The Dying Christian to His Soul.

Gray, Thomas, 1716-1771.

Elegy Written in a Country Churchyard

Odes:

On the Spring.

On a Distant Prospect of Eton College.

On the Death of a Favorite Cat.

Letters :

To Richard West, December, 1736.

To Horace Walpole, September, 1737.

To Ashton, May 22, 1739.

To his Mother, April 2, 1740.

To his Mother, April 15, 1740.

Collins, William, 1721-1759.

Odes :

To Evening. The Passions.

How Sleep the Brave? To Simplicity.

Oriental Eclogues, II. Hassan.

Dirge in Cymbeline.

Johnson, Samuel, 1709-1784.

Boswell's Life of Johnson, chapters covering the year 1763.

Rasselas.

Goldsmith, Oliver, 1728-1774.

The Vicar of Wakefield.

Poetry :

The Deserted Village. The Traveller.

Drama :

She Stoops to Conquer.

Burke, Edmund, 1729-1797.

One of the following selections :

Speech on American Taxation.

Speech on Conciliation.

Reflections on the Revolution in France, Introduction, to paragraph beginning "First, I beg leave."

Cowper, William, 1731-1800.

To Mary.	The Castaway.
John Gilpin's Ride.
On the Receipt of My Mother's Picture.
The Task, Book IV, The Winter Evening.

Blake, William, 1757-1827.

Song — "How sweet I roamed."
Song — "My silks and fine array."
Introduction to Songs of Innocence.
The Lamb.	The Tiger.
Holy Thursday.	Ah, Sunflower.
Infant Joy.	Proverbs.
The Angel.	The Crystal Cabinet.

Burns, Robert, 1759-1796.

To a Mouse.	A Bard's Epitaph.
To a Mountain Daisy.	Highland Mary.
Epistle to a Young Friend.
To a Louse.	"Is there for honest poverty."
Cotter's Saturday Night.
Address to the Unco Guid.
Tam O'Shanter.	Mary Morison.
Green Grow the Rushes, O.
"Of a' the airts."	"Ye flowery banks."
"Ae fond kiss."
Duncan Gray.
Saw ye Bonnie Lesley.
"Scots, wha hae wi' Wallace."
"O, wert thou in the cauld blast."

Scott, Walter, 1771-1832.

It is not possible to judge a novelist by detached selections. At least one of the novels mentioned should be read entire. If time does not permit this, read "Wandering Willie's Tale," in Redgauntlet, Letter XI.

Ivanhoe.

Guy Mannering.

Kenilworth.

The Talisman.

Old Mortality.

Heart of Midlothian.

Rob Roy.

Lyrics :

Hunting Song.

Nora's Vow.

The Maid of Neidpath.

Pibroch of Donald Dhu.

Jock of Hazeldean.

County Guy.

The Barefooted Friar.

Narrative Poems :

Lady of the Lake, Canto I; Canto IV, stanza 19
(Hymn to the Virgin), Canto V, stanzas 1-17.

Marmion, Canto V, stanzas 25-35.

Rokeby, Canto III, stanzas 16-19.

Austen, Jane, 1775-1817.

One of the following:

Pride and Prejudice.

Sense and Sensibility.

Emma.

Wordsworth, William, 1770-1850.

Daffodils. ("I wandered lonely as a cloud.")

The Reverie of Poor Susan.

Lines Written in Early Spring.

Expostulation and Reply.

The Tables Turned.

We are Seven.

Michael.

Hart Leap Well.

"Three years she grew."

"She dwelt among the untrodden ways."

To the Cuckoo.

"She was a phantom of delight."

The Solitary Reaper.

Yarrow Unvisited.

Ode to Duty.

"My heart leaps up when I behold."

Lines Composed above Tintern Abbey.

Ode on Intimations of Immortality.

Sonnets:

On the Extinction of the Venetian Republic.

"Two voices are there."

Written in London, September, 1802.

"The world is too much with us."

"Milton ! thou shouldst be living."

"Scorn not the sonnet."

Personal Talk.

To Sleep.

"It is a beauteous evening."

Composed upon Westminster Bridge.

Coleridge, Samuel Taylor, 1772-1834.

The Rime of the Ancient Mariner.

Christabel.

Kubla Khan.

Genevieve, or Love.

Answer to a Child's Question.

Youth and Age.

Hymn before Sunrise in the Vale of Chamouni.

Lamb, Charles, 1775-1834.

Essays of Elia :

Christ's Hospital Five and Thirty Years Ago.

New Year's Eve.

Dream-Children.

A Dissertation upon Roast Pig.

Poor Relations.

Detached Thoughts on Books and Reading.

The Superannuated Man.

Old China.

Letters :

To Coleridge, Sept. 27, 1796.

To Coleridge, Dec. 2, 1796.

To Southey, July 28, 1798.

To Coleridge, Aug. 6, 1800.

To Manning, Dec. 27, 1800.

To Wordsworth, Sept. 28, 1805.

Byron, George Gordon, 1788-1824.

Lyrics :

"She walks in beauty."

"When we two parted."

The Destruction of Sennacherib.

Maid of Athens.

Stanzas for Music.

Stanzas written between Florence and Pisa.

The Isles of Greece.

"There be none of beauty's daughters."

On this Day I Complete my Thirty-sixth Year.

Darkness.

Narrative Poems:

The Prisoner of Chillon.

Mazeppa.

Childe Harold:

Canto I, stanzas 13-14 (song).

Canto III, stanzas 2-29, and 85-104.

Canto IV, stanzas 78-148, and 177-185.

Shelley, Percy Bysshe, 1792-1822.

To Night. To —. ("Music, when

To a Skylark. soft voices die.")

The Cloud. Song—"Rarely, rarely comest

Ode to the West Wind. thou."

Ozymandias. A Lament.

The Indian Serenade. Stanzas written in Dejection

To Jane—The Invitation. near Naples.

tion. The Sensitive Plant.

To Jane—The Recollection. Adonais.

lection.

Keats, John, 1795-1821.

The Eve of St. Agnes.

Ode on a Grecian Urn.

Ode to a Nightingale.

La Belle Dame sans Merci.

Fancy.

To Autumn.

"I Stood tiptoe upon a little hill."

Ode—"Bards of passion and of mirth."

Sonnets:

On first looking into Chapman's Homer.

Last Sonnet—"When I have fears."

On the Grasshopper and Cricket.

The Human Seasons.

De Quincey, Thomas, 1785-1859.

One of the following:

Confessions of an Opium Eater:

The Pleasures of Opium.

The Pains of Opium.

The English Mail Coach:

Sections II and III.

Suspiria de Profundis:

Savannah-la-Mar.

Levana, and Our Ladies of Sorrow.

Macaulay, Thomas Babington, 1800-1859.

Prose:

Essay on Milton, or on Samuel Johnson.

History of England, Vol. I, Chap. 3.

Poems:

Lays of Ancient Rome:

Horatius.

Virginia.

Carlyle, Thomas, 1795-1881.

Heroes and Hero Worship:

Lecture V. The Hero as Man of Letters.

Sartor Resartus :

Book I, Chap. 3, Reminiscences.

Book II, Chap. 7, The Everlasting No.

Book II, Chap. 9, The Everlasting Yea.

Ruskin, John, 1819-1900.Sesame and Lilies :

Lecture I. Of Kings' Treasuries.

Crown of Wild Olive :

Introduction, and Lecture I. Work.

Fronde Agrestes :

Sections III and IV.

Newman, John Henry, 1801-1890.Idea of a University :

University Subjects: Literature.

Historical Sketches (also published under the title Office and Work of Universities) :

Chapter II. What is a University?

Chapter III. Site of a University.

Chapter IV. University Life: Athens.

Arnold, Matthew, 1822-1888.Poems :

— Sohrab and Rustum.	Requiescat.
The Forsaken Merman.	Worldly Place.
The Buried Life.	Self-dependence.
Memorial Verses.	A Wish.
Shakespeare.	Rugby Chapel.

Essays:

On the Study of Poetry, in Essays in Criticism, second series. (Also given in Ward's English Poets, Vol. I, Introduction.)

Dickens, Charles, 1812-1870.

One of the following:

David Copperfield.

Oliver Twist.

Pickwick Papers.

Tale of Two Cities.

Nicholas Nickleby.

Old Curiosity Shop.

Dombey and Son.

Our Mutual Friend.

Thackeray, William Makepeace, 1811-1863.

One of the following:

Vanity Fair.

Henry Esmond.

Pendennis.

The Newcomes.

The Virginians.

George Eliot, 1819-1880.

One of the following:

Silas Marner.

Adam Bede.

Mill on the Floss.

Middlemarch.

Stevenson, Robert Louis, 1850-1894.

Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

The Master of Ballantrae.

Letters, Vol. I, pp. 86-90; 100-102; 140-143; 197-198;
343-345; 416-418.

Vol. II, pp. 39-44; 174-178; 253-257; 278-283;
438-446.

Tennyson, Alfred, 1809-1892.

Melodies and pictures :

The Lady of Shalott.	Mariana.
The Day-Dream.	The Eagle.
Saint Agnes' Eve.	Far, Far Away.
Sir Lancelot and Queen Guinevere.
Sir Galahad.	Songs from The Princess.

Narrative Poems :

Morte D'Arthur.	Dora.
The Sisters.	Enoch Arden.

Idylls of the King :

Lancelot and Elaine.	Gareth and Lynette.
----------------------	---------------------

Character Studies :

Locksley Hall.	Ulysses.
Northern Farmer, New Style.

Reflective Poems :

- "Break, break, break."
 The Poet.
 "Flower in the crannied wall."
 Ode on the Duke of Wellington.
 Merlin and the Gleam.
 Crossing the Bar.

In Memoriam :

- Prelude.
 Sec. XI. "Calm is the morn."
 Sec. XIV. "If one should bring me."
 Sec. XXVII. "I envy not, in any moods."
 Sec. L. "Be near me when my light."
 Sec. LI. "Do we indeed desire."

- Sec. LIV. "O, yet we trust that somehow."
 Sec. LV. "The wish that of the living whole."
 Sec. LXVII. "When on my bed."
 Sec. LXXIII. "So many worlds, so much to do."
 Sec. LXXXV. "This truth came borne."
 Sec. LXXXVI. "Sweet after showers."
 Sec. XCVI. "You say, but with no touch."
 Sec. CVI. "Ring out, wild bells."
 Sec. CXX. "I trust I have not wasted."
 Sec. CXXX. "Thy voice is on the rolling air."

Browning, Robert, 1812-1889.

Narrative Poems :

- How They Brought the Good News.
 The Pied Piper of Hamelin.
 Herve Riel.
 The Flight of the Duchess.

Lyrical and Dramatic Poems :

- Evelyn Hope. One Word More.
 Garden Fancies, I. Home Thoughts, from Abroad.
 The Laboratory. Home Thoughts, from the Sea.
 The Lost Mistress. The Lost Leader.
 Meeting at Night. Memorabilia.
 Parting at Morning.
 Love Among the Ruins.
 A Woman's Last Word.
 One Way of Love.
 The Last Ride Together.
 Youth and Art.

Character Studies :

My Last Duchess. Andrea del Sarto.
The Bishop Orders His Tomb.

Reflective Poems :

Prospice. Epilogue to Asolando.
Abt Vogler. Saul.
House. Rabbi Ben Ezra.

Browning, Elizabeth Barrett, 1806-1861.

The Sleep. The Cry of the Children.
Cowper's Grave. A Musical Instrument.
The House of Clouds. Mother and Poet.
The Mask.

Sonnets from the Portuguese :

Numbers I, V, X, XIV, XVIII, XXVIII, XXXVIII, XLII.

Rossetti, Dante Gabriel, 1828-1882.

The Blessed Damosel.
Sister Helen. The Cloud-Confiner.
The Portrait. John Keats.
The Burden of Nineveh. Winter.
The Woodspurge. Fiammetta.

The House of Life :

Lovesight. Body's Beauty.
Silent Noon. Lost Days.
Inclusiveness. A Superscription.
Soul's Beauty.

II. American Literature

Franklin, Benjamin, 1706-1790.

Autobiography:

Chapters I, II, V, at least.

Poor Richard's Almanac:

Father Abraham's Speech.

Irving, Washington, 1783-1859.

The Sketch Book:

Rip Van Winkle.

Christmas Eve.

Westminster Abbey.

Christmas Day.

The Stage Coach.

The Christmas Dinner.

The Legend of Sleepy Hollow.

Knickerbocker's History of New York

Book III, Chaps. 1-4, inclusive.

Bryant, William Cullen, 1794-1878.

Thanatopsis.

The Planting of the Appletree.

To a Waterfowl.

A Forest Hymn.

Robert of Lincoln.

The Death of the Flowers.

The Wind and Stream.

To the Fringed Gentian.

Sella.

Song of Marion's Men.

The Flood of Years.

The Antiquity of Freedom.

Webster, Daniel, 1782-1852.

One of the following:

First Bunker Hill Oration.

Reply to Hayne.

Adams and Jefferson.

Cooper, James Fenimore, 1789-1851.

At least one of the following novels should be read :

The Deerslayer.

The Spy.

The Last of the Mohicans.

The Pilot.

The Prairie.

The Pathfinder.

Lincoln, Abraham, 1809-1865.

Gettysburg Speech.

Second Inaugural Address.

Emerson, Ralph Waldo.

Prose. At least one of the following essays :

Essays, First Series :

Compensation ; Self-reliance.

Nature, Addresses and Lectures :

The American Scholar.

Conduct of Life :

Culture.

Society and Solitude :

Books.

Poems :

Of Nature :

The Rhodora.

The Apology.

The Humble-Bee.

The Titmouse.

The Snow Storm.

Waldeinsamkeit.

Patriotic :

Concord Hymn.

Boston Hymn.

Ode (July 4, 1857).

Reflective :

Each and All.

Eros.

The Problem.

Compensation.

Good-Bye.	Days.
Forbearance.	Threnody.

Thoreau, Henry David, 1817-1862.

Excursions :

The Succession of Forest Trees.
Wild Apples.

Walden :

Economy.
Conclusion.

Hawthorne, Nathaniel, 1804-1864.

Short Stories, One of the following groups :

Twice Told Tales :

The Great Carbuncle. David Swan.
The Gray Champion. The Ambitious Guest.

The Snow Image :

The Snow Image. The Great Stone Face.
Ethan Brand. The Man of Adamant.

Mosses from an Old Manse :

The Birthmark. Young Goodman Brown.
Buds and Bird Voices. Feathertop.

Romances, one of the following :

The Scarlet Letter. The Marble Faun.

House of the Seven Gables.

Longfellow, Henry Wadsworth, 1807-1882.

Lyrical Poems :

Psalm of Life. The Old Clock on the Stairs.
Reaper and the Flowers.
The Fire of Driftwood.
Endymion. Resignation.

The Rainy Day.	The Builders.
Excelsior.	My Lost Youth.
The Slave's Dream.	The Children's Hour.
The Arsenal at Springfield.
The Day is Done.
The Ladder of St. Augustine.

Sonnets :

Chaucer.	Milton.	Nature.
The Broken Oar.	The Cross of Snow.

Ballads and Other Narrative Poems :

The Skeleton in Armor.	Paul Revere's Ride.
The Wreck of the Hesperus.	King Robert of Sicily.

Longer Poems :

The Building of the Ship.	Evangeline.
The Song of Hiawatha, Sections IV-X.
The Courtship of Miles Standish.
Christus, Part II.	The Golden Legend.

Whittier, John Greenleaf, 1807-1892.

Proem.	Barclay of Ury.
Massachusetts to Virginia.
Ichabod !	Burns.
Barbara Frietchie.	Skipper Ireson's Ride.
Laus Deo !	The Pipes at Lucknow.
The Huskers.	Prelude to Among the Hills.
The Barefoot Boy.	In Schooldays.
Maud Muller.	My Psalm.
Telling the Bees.	The Eternal Goodness.
Snow-Bound.
My Playmate.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, 1809-1894.

Poems:

- | | |
|-------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| Old Ironsides. | Contentment. |
| The Last Leaf. | The Deacon's Masterpiece. |
| To an Insect. | Under the Violets. |
| The Voiceless. | Hymn of Trust. |
| For the Burns Centennial. | |
| | Epilogue to Breakfast Table Series. |
| Bill and Joe. | Dorothy Q. |
| The Old Man Dreams. | A Familiar Letter. |
| The Boys. | The Iron Gate. |
| The Chambered Nautilus. | |
| Grandmother's Story of Bunker Hill. | |

Prose:

The Autocrat of The Breakfast Table, Sections I-IV.

Lowell, James Russell, 1819-1891.

Poems:

- | | |
|------------------------|-----------------------|
| Rhœcus. | For an Autograph. |
| The Present Crisis. | After the Burial. |
| To the Dandelion. | Mahmood the Image- |
| She Came and Went. | Breaker. |
| Vision of Sir Launfal. | The Footpath. |
| In the Twilight. | Harvard Commemoration |
| The First Snow Fall. | Ode. |

Biglow Papers:

- What Mr. Robinson Thinks.
The Courtin'.

Fable for Critics:

Sketches of Emerson, Bryant, Hawthorne, Cooper.

Prose:Among My Books, First Series.

Shakspeare Once More.

My Study Windows.

My Garden Acquaintance.

Letters, Vol. 1, pp. 69-73; 86-90; 162-166; 214-217; 272-274.Read, Thomas Buchanan, 1822-1872.

Drifting.

The Celestial Army.

Sheridan's Ride.

The Closing Scene.

Prescott, William Hickling, 1796-1859.Conquest of Mexico.

Book I, Chap. 3.

Motley, John Lothrop, 1814-1877.Rise of the Dutch Republic.

Part I, Chap. I.

Parkman, Francis, 1823-1893.Conspiracy of Pontiac.

Chapters I, II.

Jesuits in North America.

Chapters I, III, IV.

Poe, Edgar Allan, 1809-1849.Poems:

The Raven.

The Haunted Palace.

Lenore.

The Conqueror Worm.

To Helen.

The City in the Sea.

The Bells.

The Sleeper.

Annabel Lee.

Israfel.

Prose:

The Gold Bug.	The Pit and the Pendulum.
The Fall of the House	The Tell-Tale Heart.
of Usher.	A Descent into the Maël-
The Masque of the Red	strom.
Death.

Lanier, Sidney, 1842-1881.

Song of the Chattahoochee.	Song for "The Jacque-
Tampa Robins.	rie."
The Stirring Cup.	Hymns of the Marshes:
The Mocking Bird.	I. Sunrise.
A Ballad of Trees and the	IV. The Marshes
Master.	of Glynn.

Whitman, Walt, 1819-1892.

To the Man of War Bird.	What best I see in thee.
Patrolling Barnegat.	Joy, Shipmate, Joy !
With Husky-Haughty Lips, O Sea !
Song of the Broad-Axe.
Dirge for Two Veterans.
O Captain, My Captain !
Old Ireland.

When Lilacs last in the Dooryard Bloom'd.

Mitchell, Donald Grant, 1822-.

Reveries of a Bachelor :
First Reverie.

Curtis, George William, 1824-1892.

Prue and I.
My Chateaux.

Warner, Charles Dudley, 1829-1900.

My Summer in a Garden :

First Three Weeks.

Taylor, Bayard, 1825-1878.

Poems :

Amram's Wooing.	Proposal.
Hylas.	The Lost Crown.
Bedouin Song.	Peach-Blossom.
Nubia.	The Poet in the East.
The Quaker Widow.	Metempsychosis of the Pine.

Prose :

Views Afoot.

Chapters V, VI, XII, XLIX.

Stedman, Edmund Clarence, 1833-.

Toujours Amour.	Falstaff's Song.
The Doorstep.	Song from a Drama.
Fuit Ilium.	Wanted — a Man.
Pan in Wall Street.	"The Undiscovered Country."
Cavalry Song.	The Discoverer.
	Hawthorne.

Aldrich, Thomas Bailey, 1836-.

Poems :

Baby Bell.
Friar Jerome's Beautiful Book.
Tiger Lilies.	The Tragedy.
When the Sultan Goes to Ispahan.
Before the Rain.	Guilelmus Rex.
After the Rain.	Identity.

Sonnets :

Fredericksburg.

Enamored Architect of Airy Rhyme.

Sleep.

Prose :

Marjorie Daw and Other People.

Marjorie Daw.

Eggleston, Edward, 1837-1903.

The Hoosier Schoolmaster.

Harte, Francis Bret, 1839-1902.

Poems :

John Burns of Gettysburg.

Caldwell of Springfield.

Ramon.

Dow's Flat.

Plain Language from Truthful James.

The Society upon the Stanislaus.

Her Letter.

Grizzly.

Dickens in Camp.

Prose :

The Luck of Roaring Camp, in the volume of that name.

Howells, William Dean, 1837-.

The Lady of the Aroostook.

A Modern Instance.

The Rise of Silas Lapham.

James, Henry, 1843-.

Daisy Miller.

The Lesson of the Master.

The Marriages.

Adela Chart.

Burroughs, John, 1837-.

Winter Sunshine.

The Apple.

Riverby.

Eye-Beams.

Fiske, John, 1842-1901.

The Discovery of America.

Vol. I, Chap. V.

INDEX TO RECOMMENDED READING

- Addison, Joseph, 128.
 Aldrich, T. B., 148.
 Arnold, Matthew, 136.
 Austen, Jane, 131.
 Bacon, Francis, 125.
 Ballads, 125.
 Blake, William, 130.
 Browning, E. B., 140.
 Browning, Robert, 139.
 Bryant, W. C., 141.
 Bunyan, John, 127.
 Burke, Edmund, 129.
 Burns, Robert, 130.
 Burroughs, John, 150.
 Byron, G. G., 133.
 Carlyle, Thomas, 135.
 Chaucer, Geoffrey, 124.
 Coleridge, S. T., 132.
 Collins, William, 129.
 Cooper, J. F., 142.
 Cowper, William, 130.
 Curtis, G. W., 147.
 De Foe, Daniel, 128.
 De Quincey, Thomas, 135.
 Dickens, Charles, 136.
 Dryden, John, 127.
 Eggleston, Edward, 149.
 Eliot, George, 137.
 Emerson, R. W., 142.
 Fiske, John, 150.
 Franklin, Benjamin, 141.
 Goldsmith, Oliver, 129.
 Gray, Thomas, 128.
 Harte, F. B., 149.
 Hawthorne, Nathaniel, 143.
 Herrick, Robert, 126.
 Holmes, O. W., 145.
 Howells, W. D., 149.
 Irving, Washington, 141.
 James, Henry, 150.
 Johnson, Samuel, 129.
 Keats, John, 134.
 Lamb, Charles, 133.
 Lanier, Sidney, 147.
 Lincoln, Abraham, 142.
 Longfellow, H. W., 143.
 Lowell, J. R., 145.
 Macaulay, T. B., 135.
 Marlowe, Christopher, 126.
 Milton, John, 127.
 Mitchell, D. G., 147.
 Motley, J. L., 146.
 Newman, J. H., 136.
 Parkman, Francis, 146.
 Poe, E. A., 146.
 Pope, Alexander, 128.
 Prescott, W. H., 146.
 Read, T. B., 146.
 Rossetti, D. G., 140.
 Ruskin, John, 136.
 Scott, Walter, 131.
 Shakspeare, William, 126.
 Shelley, P. B., 134.
 Spenser, Edmund, 125.
 Stedman, E. C., 148.
 Stevenson, R. L., 137.
 Swift, Jonathan, 128.
 Taylor, Bayard, 148.
 Tennyson, Alfred, 138.
 Thackeray, W. M., 137.
 Thoreau, H. D., 143.
 Warner, C. D., 148.
 Webster, Daniel, 141.
 Whitman, Walt, 147.
 Whittier, J. G., 144.
 Wordsworth, William, 131.

Our Own Publications

Cloth unless otherwise stated

31-33-35 West Fifteenth Street

Between Fifth and Sixth Avenues

Schoolbooks of all publishers at one store

The Worth of Words. By Raley Husted Bell. (Library Edition, $1.25.) School Edition, 75 cents.

How to Use the Voice in Reading and Speaking. By Ed. Amherst Ott, head of the School of Oratory, Drake University. Suitable for class work. $1.25.

How to Gesture. By Professor Ott. Revised edit. $1.00.

Ten Weeks' Course in Elocution. With numerous selections for illustration and practice. $1.25.

Fenno's Science and Art of Elocution. Standard. $1.25.

New Parliamentary Manual. By Edmond Palmer, A.B. Designed to be used both as a manual at meetings and as a textbook in schools and colleges. The special feature of this book is the new and original table enabling one to decide at a glance any parliamentary question. 75 cents. Wholly new.

How to Organize and Conduct a Meeting. 75 cents.

Likes and Opposites. Synonyms and Opposites. To have at one's command a variety of equivalent words and their opposites is to possess an incalculable advantage both in writing and speaking. 50 cents.

Letter Writing. Rules for correct correspondence. 75 cts.

Punctuation Mastered in Twelve Lessons. Paper. 25 cents.

Punctuation. Hinds & Noble's new Manual. Paper, 25 cents.

New Speller. Hinds & Noble's new graded list of 5,000 words which one must know how to spell. Useful. 25c.

Bad English. Humiliating "breaks" corrected. Paper. 30 cents.

Common Errors in Writing and Speaking. 50 cents. Invaluable vade mecum.

Composition Writing Made Easy. Very successful. Five grades, viz.: A, B, C, D, E, 20 cents each. All five for 75 cents. Arranged on separate cards.

1000 Composition Subjects. Paper. 25 cents.

Orthography and Orthoepy. By Isaac W. Clinger. Adapted for class use. Boards. 50 cents.

Complete Class Record-Book. Hinds & Noble's new register, with several new and very useful features.

Twenty weeks. Arranged by John J. Quinn. 50 cents.

Smith's New Class Register. Long the Standard. 50 cts.

Manual Training Class Register. By J. J. Quinn. 75c.

Smith's New Astronomy. Illus. Quarto. Boards, 90 cts.

Coon's Civil Government. For N. Y. State. 75 cents.

Constitution of U. S. in Eng., Ger., Fr. Pa. 25c. Clo. 50c.

How to Study Literature. A novel, a poem, a history, a biography, a drama, an oration, a sermon, or any other literary production, if read or studied as this book tells one how to read and study, becomes a subject which one can discuss or write about in a thoroughly intelligent and comprehensive way. Enables you to talk about a book as if you had really sized it up completely. Just the thing for literary societies, reading circles, the casual reader, as well as for teacher and pupil; also for any one who desires to retain a symmetrical impression of the books he reads.

Five editions in first five months. 75 cents. New.

Rhetoric. A new textbook. By M. L. Radford. $1.00.

Who's Who in Mythology? 1000 mythological characters briefly described. Identifies and locates instantly every god and goddess, hero and myth that are likely to be broached either in conversation, sermon, song, drama, painting or statuary. 75 cents.

Who's Who in History? 1000 classical characters and allusions briefly explained. Locates the places, identifies the persons, describes the things, which are constantly alluded to in literature, on the rostrum and platform, in sermons, in paintings, in sculpture and in conversation. 75 cents.

What Shall I Do? 50 profitable occupations. $1.00.

Going to College. Says The Evangelist: "Glows with the enthusiasm of a high ideal. We wish it could be in the library of every high school, seminary, and academy in the land." Inspiring! 50 cents.

The Scholar's A B C of Electricity. Can you explain the simple phenomena of electricity? Do you hate to appear ignorant of the very simplest facts regarding the telephone, the telegraph, the electric light, the dynamo, the trolley? This book states the facts in clear words devoid of technicalities, and in entertaining style. No need to study or commit to memory; just to read it is to understand. 50 cents.

Lessons on Practical Subjects. Of public interest. 50 cents.

Lessons on Manners. Mrs. Dewey. 75 cents.

Lessons on Morals. Mrs. Dewey. 75 cents.

The Virtues and their Reasons. Every-day ethics for school and home. Guide for parent and teacher. $1.00.

Character Building. Inspiring suggestions. $1.00.

Bookkeeping Blanks at 30 cents per set. Five blank books to the set. Adapted for use with any text-book, —Elem., Practical, or Com. School. Used everywhere.

Bookkeeping and Science of Accounts. Robertson. $1.20

The Best American Orations of To-day. $1.25. New.
How to Attract and Hold an Audience. Every clergyman, every lawyer, every teacher, every man or woman occupying an official position, every citizen and every youth who is likely ever to have occasion in committee, or in public, to enlist the interest, to attract and hold the attention of one or more hearers, and convince them—every person who ever has to, or is likely to have to “speak” to one or more listeners will find in our new book a clear, concise, complete handbook which will enable him to succeed! 4th edition. $1.00.

Thorough, concise, methodical, replete with common sense, complete—these words describe fitly this new book; and in his logical method, in the crystal-like lucidity of his style, in his forceful, incisive, penetrating mastery of his subject, the author has at one bound placed himself on a plane with the very ablest teacher-authors of his day. Fourth edition within its first year!

Commencement Parts. “Efforts” for all occasions. Orations, addresses, valedictories, salutatories, class poems, class mottoes, after-dinner speeches, flag days, national holidays, class-day exercises. Models for every possible occasion in high-school and college career, every one of the “efforts” being what some fellow has stood on his feet and actually delivered on a similar occasion—not what the compiler would say if he should happen to be called on for an ivy song or a response to a toast, or what not; but what the fellow himself, when his turn came, did say! Invaluable, indispensable to those preparing any kind of “effort.” Unique. $1.50.

Readings from the Popular Novels. $1.00. New.

New Dialogues and Plays. Life-like episodes from popular authors like Stevenson, Crawford, Mark Twain, Dickens, Scott, in the form of simple plays, with every detail explained as to dress, make-up, utensils, furniture, etc. For schoolroom or parlor. $1.50.

A Southern Speaker. Selections from the orations, addresses, and writings of the best known Southern orators, Southern statesmen and authors. $1.00.

Reading. A Well-Planned Course. $1.00. By Caroline B. Le Row, compiler of “Pieces for Every Occasion.” There has long been wanted a book of new selections for classes, with lessons on the art of reading, College Men's 3-Minute Declamations. Up-to-date selections from live men like Chauncey Depew, Hewitt, Gladstone, Cleveland, Presidents Eliot (Harvard), and Carter (Williams), and others. New material with vitality in it for prize speaking. Very popular. Ninth edition. $1.00.

College Maids' 3-Minute Readings. Up-to-date recitations from living men and women. On the plan of the popular College Men's 3-minute Declamations, and on the same high plane. 7th edition. $1.00.

Pieces for Prize Speaking Contests. Volume I. Over one hundred pieces that have actually taken prizes in prize speaking contests. 5th edit. Successful. $1.25.

Pieces for Prize Speaking Contests. Vol. II. 3d ed. $1.25.

Pieces for Every Occasion. Including "special days." Something new, $1.25.

Handy Pieces to Speak. Single pieces and dialogues. Primary, 20 cts.; Intermediate, 20 cts.; Advanced, 20 cts. All three for 50 cts. On separate cards. 108 selections in all.

Acme Declamation Book. Single pieces and dialogues. For boys and girls of all ages; all occasions. Paper, 30 cts.; cloth, 50 cts. Many editions sold.

Pros and Cons. Complete debates of the affirmative and negative of the stirring questions of the day. A decided hit. This is another book invaluable not only to high-school and college students, but also to every other person who aspires to converse engagingly on the topics of the day. Our foreign policy, the currency, the tariff, immigration, high license, woman suffrage, penny postage, transportation, trusts, department stores, municipal ownership of franchises, government control of telegraph.

Both sides of these and many other questions completely debated. Directions for organizing and conducting debating society, with by-laws and parliamentary rules. No other book like it. Enlarged ed. $1.50.

Songs of All the Colleges. New ed. contains the Bools!
A welcome gift in any home! Everyone likes a college song, and this book is an ideal gift to place on the piano for one's friends to enjoy, even though one sings not himself. Words and music throughout. $1.50.

New edition with 104 songs added for 67 other colleges. Over seventy college presidents have purchased this volume to have at their homes, for the students on social occasions. Fourteen editions have gone into many thousands of homes. If you have a piano but do not play, the PIANOLA and other "piano-players" will play many of these songs for you and your friends to sing.

Compiled by college men, endorsed by college presidents, 'rah-'rah'd by college students, brothered by college alumni, sistered by college alumnae, adopted and programed by college glee clubs everywhere; by local clubs, choral societies, and singing classes. Contains all the dear old familiar songs, as well as the popular new songs typical of alma mater in colleges east, west, south, north. Many old favorite tunes with new catchy, up-to-date words—serious, sentimental, humorous; also the 'rah, 'rah kind. Yalemen know, and the New Haven Union says: "The question of what in the world to give a friend is solved by the publication of SONGS OF ALL THE COLLEGES, which is suitable alike for the collegian of the past, for the student of the present, and for the boy (or girl) with hopes, also for the music-loving sister and a fellow's best girl." Another college paper: "They ring true!" Says the Principal of a famous private school: "It incites to college." Durable cloth.

Songs of the Western Colleges. Durable cloth binding, $1.25.

Songs of the Eastern Colleges. Novel, durable cloth, $1.25.

These two books present an ideally complete portrayal of the musical and social side, the joyous side, of the student life in our Western and Eastern colleges respectively. Plenty of the old favorites of all colleges, while crowded with the new songs.

To own all three above books is to possess the most complete, the most adequate illustration ever attempted of this phase of the genius, the spirit of Young America.

New Songs for College Glee Clubs. Paper. 50 cents. Twenty humorous hits, besides others, sentimental and serious. Not a selection but has been sung by some glee club locally to the delight of an "encoring audience."

Glee Club leaders will appreciate a collection every piece in which, by the severe test of both rehearsal and concert, is right—the musical notation, the harmony of the voice parts, the syllabification, the rhythm, the rhyme, the instrumentation, and last, but not least with audiences, the catchonativeness.

The Science of Study. By James G. Moore. $1.00. New.
School Management. By Dr. Levi Seeley. $1.25. New.
The Foundations of Education. By Dr. Levi Seeley.
 author of "History of Education." In this book the author, an able teacher and superintendent of long experience, recounts from his experience for the benefit of teachers, those very many things, the avoiding which or the doing which, as the case may be, makes for failure or success accordingly. $1.00. Recent.

Gordy's A Broader Elementary Education. By the author of New Psychology, $1.25. Questions on each chapter.

Gordy's New Psychology. Familiar talks to teachers and parents on how to observe the child-mind.
Questions on each Lesson. $1.25. 37th thousand!

Methods of Teaching Gymnastics. Anderson. $1.25.

Best Methods of Teaching in Country Schools. $1.25.

200 Lessons Outlined in Arithmetic, Geography, Grammar, United States History, Physiology. A splendid help for busy, time-pressed teachers. $1.25.

Mistakes of Teachers corrected by common sense (the famous Preston Papers). Solves difficulties not explained in textbooks, which daily perplex the conscientious teacher.
New Enlarged Edition—fourth large printing. A veritable hit. $1.00.

Page's Theory and Practice of Teaching.
 With Questions and Answers. Paper,
 50c. Cloth, $1. The teachers' standby.

Roark's Outline of Pedagogy. A Working Manual. Aptly and briefly described as an indispensable tool for "teachers in the trenches." Interleaved for notes. 75 cents.

Stout's Manual of Psychology. Introduced in its first year into more than fourscore of colleges and universities in this country and in Canada. $1.50.

Stout's Groundwork of Psychology. $1.25. New.

The Perceptualist. Hamilton's Mental Science. By special typographical arrangement adapted to either a longer or shorter course. $2.00.

Mackenzie's Manual of Ethics. The most successful text-book on ethics ever published. Adopted and used in over two hundred Colleges, Universities and Normal Schools. New, Fourth Edition. $1.50.

Continental Copy Books, Numbers 1 to 7. 75 cents dozen.

How to Become Quick at Figures. Enlarged Edition. $1.00.

How to Prepare for a Civil Service Examination, with recent Examination Questions and the Answers. Cloth, 560 pages. $2.00.
Abridged Edition, without Questions and Answers. Paper, 50 cents.

Craig's Common School Questions, with Answers. Enlarged Edition. $1.50.

Henry's High School Questions, with Answers. $1.50.

Sherrill's New Normal Questions, with Answers. $1.50.

Quizzism and Its Key. (Southwick.) $1.00.

1001 Questions and Answers Series. Eleven Volumes, until recently published by THE B. B. CO., each 50 cts.

Theory and Practice Teaching. Revised.

United States History. Revised.

General History. Revised.

Geography. Revised.

English Grammar. Revised.

Reading and Orthography. Revised.

Physiology and Hygiene. Revised.

Botany. New.

Natural Philosophy. New.

Arithmetic. Revised.

Test Examples in Arith., with Answers. Revised.

Moritz's 1000 Questions. For Entrance Examinations. N. Y. High Schools, Normal College, College of City of N. Y., St. Francis Xavier College, West Point, Annapolis, and Civil Service. Paper. 30 cents.

Answers to same. Paper. 50 cents.

Recent Entrance Examination Questions. For the New York Normal College, the College of the City of New York, St. Francis Xavier College, Columbia College, the High Schools, Regents' Examinations, West Point, Annapolis, the Civil Service. Paper. 30 cts.

Answers to Same. Paper. 50 cents.

20th Century Educational Problems. By President Millar of Hendrix College. A timely discussion. $1.00.

Henry's Normal U. S. History. Non-partisan. $1.00.

Dictionaries: The Classic Series. Half morocco. Especially planned for students and teachers in colleges and high schools. Up to the times in point of contents, authoritative while modern as regards scholarship, instantly accessible in respect to arrangement, of best quality as to typography and paper, and in a binding at once elegant and durable. 8x5½ in.

French-English and English-French Dictionary,
1122 pages. $2.00.

German-English and English-German Dictionary
1112 pages. $2.00.

Latin-English and English-Latin Dictionary, 941
pages. $2.00.

Greek-English and English-Greek Dictionary,
1056 pages. $2.00.

English-Greek Dictionary. Price $1.00.

Dictionaries: The Handy Series. "Scholarship modern and accurate; and really beautiful print."
Pocket Edition.

Spanish-English and Eng.-Span., 474 pages. $1.00

Italian-English and Eng.-Ital., 428 pages. $1.00

New Testament Lexicon. Entirely new and up-to-date. With a fine presentation of the Synonyms of the Greek Testament. $1.00.

Liddell & Scott's Abridged Greek Lexicon. With new Appendix of Proper and Geographical names. $1.20.

White's Latin-English Dictionary. $1.20.

White's English-Latin Dictionary. $1.20.

White's Latin-English and Eng.-Lat. Dictionary. $2.25.

Cassierly's Latin Prosody. New Edition. 60 cents.

Brooks' Historia Sacra, with First Latin Lessons. Revised with Vocabulary, Price 50 cts. This justly popular volume besides the Epitome Historiæ Sacræ, the Notes, and the Vocabulary, contains 100 pages of elementary Latin Lessons, enabling the teacher to carry the pupil quickly and in easy steps over the ground preparatory to the Epitome Historiæ Sacræ.

Brooks' First Lessons in Greek, with Lexicon. Revised Edition. Covering sufficient ground to enable the student to read the New Testament in the Greek. 50c.

Brooks' New Virgil's Aeneid, with Lexicon. Revised. Notes, Metrical Index, Map. With Questions. $1.50.

Brooks' New Ovid's Metamorphoses, with Lexicon. Expurgated for mixed classes. With Questions. $1.50.

The Worth of Words

By DR. RALCY HUSTED BELL, has rapidly passed through two editions and is now in the third, which has been carefully enlarged and revised by the Author. The success of this book was widely predicted by the press last year, and is justified by Dr. Bell's scholarly work. He has treated the subject in a new and simple manner and after his own peculiar style, which is never dry or wearisome. For it is touched, here and there, with glowing humor, deft strokes of sarcasm, and lighted with flashes of wit; all of which sustains interest in a subject usually too heavy for enjoyable reading. The book will be found useful to all who would speak and write good English: the editor, lawyer, doctor, man of affairs, student in art or science or devotee of fashionable society. The arrangement of subject matter in pithy paragraphs of alphabetical sequence, and with marginal notes, makes it very handy as a ready reference book.

Dr. Bell is well known as a poet in literary circles, and stands high in the profession of medicine as a writer and editor, while as a Fellow of the American Geographical Society and member of other scientific associations he is equally well known.

THE WORTH OF WORDS is printed in clear type; contains 336 pages. The Library Edition is bound in cloth, brown and gold, with gilt top and cut pages.

PRICE, $1.25 POSTPAID.

SCHOOL EDITION, 75 CENTS, POSTPAID.

P. S.—This book is especially valuable to teachers and pupils.

Hinds & Noble, Publishers

31-33-35 West 15th Street

New York City

School books of all publishers at one store

The Science of Study

By JAMES G. MOORE

CLOTH—Price $1.00 Postpaid—TWELVEMO

From the Preface—To see an object is a simple act. To perceive its outlines accurately is an act of higher quality. But to behold a thing in the fullness of its manifold interrelations is a power partly inherited, partly acquired, whose rarity is not less than its priceless worth. Nowhere is this comparison more prominently forced upon our notice than in the field of educational work. * * * * * Few indeed are the educators who have dealt with the problem of educational work in full recognition of the organic interrelations of its physical, psychological and sociological aspects and with a comprehensive grasp of the whole student period in its bearing upon the future life work of the student.

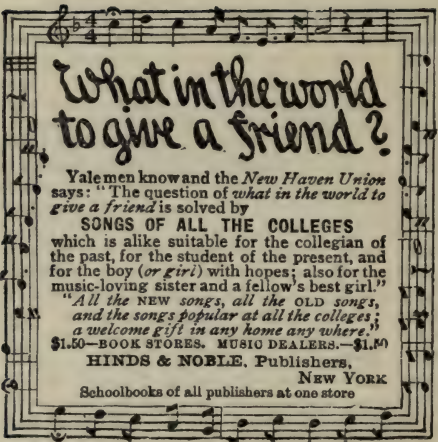

* * * * * The student himself must be understood, and his instruction adapted to his natural conditions of development, both those conditions which apply to him in common with all students, and also those conditions peculiarly individual. Further, the social and industrial life surrounding him must be carefully studied, as determining to a considerable extent the whole character of his future life work. For education ought to prepare the student directly and organically, yet broadly and thoroughly, for a life work. There can be no other justification for our splendid array of educational institutions. In fact, there can be no other justification for our very existence. It is not enough for us to be. We must do—do something worthy, and do it well. Yet society is so organized that thorough preparation for a life work necessarily involves a preparation for usefulness in certain fields of correlated activities. This brings an obligation for trained social service. Besides, most persons feel an active interest in certain subjects not in any way connected with their professional interests, and oftentimes achieve valuable results along such lines. To provide for such training and to furnish general culture along those great lines of activity not included in the student's professional training becomes an essential part of a complete scheme of study.

Hinds & Noble, Publishers

31-33-35 West 15th Street

New York City

Schoolbooks of all publishers at one store

What in the world to give a friend?

Yale men know and the New Haven Union says: "The question of what in the world to give a friend is solved by which is alike suitable for the collegian of the past, for the student of the present, and for the boy (or girl) with hopes; also for the music-loving sister and a fellow's best girl."

SONGS OF ALL THE COLLEGES

"All the NEW songs, all the OLD songs, and the songs popular at all the colleges; a welcome gift in any home any where."

$1.50—BOOK STORES. MUSIC DEALERS.—$1.50

HINDS & NOBLE, Publishers,

NEW YORK

Schoolbooks of all publishers at one store

PLEASE DO NOT REMOVE CARDS OR SLIPS FROM THIS POCKET

UNIVERSITY OF TORONTO LIBRARY

PN
59
H45
1903

Heydrick, Benjamin Alexander
How to study literature

